ADVENTISTS OPPOSED TO BLUE LAWS.

Described as Encroachment of Civil Power Into Religious Realm.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Sunday blue laws are described as encroachment of civil power into the spiritual realm in a memorial adopted by the general conference committee of Seventh Day Adventists made public today. Opposition to all Sunday laws is declared, particularly to proposed Federal enactments.

Asserting that the separation of church and State was essential to the country's well-being, the memorial declared that failure to recognize this distinction had been the primary cause of religious persecutions. The present "strong organized efforts" to secure blue law enactments, it added, "are destructive to the church and State, however innocent they may appear, and if successful will eventually destroy the pillars upon which our government is founded."

"Sabbath keeping is not a civil, but a religious duty," the memorial declared. "Congress has nothing whatever to do with the question of its observance.

"Only those whose hearts God has changed can truly keep a holy Sabbath. No legislation by Congress can change the human heart.

"Honest labor is not more uncivil on Sunday than on Monday. It is only religious prejudices which are disturbed by labor on this day rather than on other days. But bolstering of some particular theological dogma and protecting the religious prejudices of citizens is not the business of Congress."

CALIFORNIA GOES AHEAD.

ate Leaps from Tenth to Fourth Place in Value of Farm Crops.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NGTON, Jan. 15.—All farm crops of the country were valued last year, based on December 1 prices paid to producers, of Agriculture has estimated. That compares with $16,- in 1919 and $10,156,426,000, the five-year average, 1914 to 1918, inclusive.

Texas maintained its place as producer of crops of greatest value, with a total of $727,400,000, which was half a billion dollars less than in 1919. Iowa retained second rank with $459,191,000. Illinois, only slightly behind Iowa, continued its place as third, with $459,179,000.

CALIFORNIA'S LEAP.

California jumped from tenth into fourth place, held in 1919 by North Carolina, with $457,750,000. New York went into fifth place from fourteenth rank, with $456,507,000. North Carolina dropped into sixth place with $412,374,000.

Pennsylvania went forward into seventh place from sixteenth rank the previous year, with $397,617,000. Kansas dropped from fifth rank into eighth place with $378,436,000. LORD MAYOR WINS POINT

Deportation Order is Ignored.

O'Callaghan is Allowed to Land in America as Seaman.

Acting Secretary of State to Make Investigation of the Ruling.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Ignoring the State Department's order of deportation, Secretary of Labor Wilson today granted Lord Mayor O'Callaghan of Cork, who arrived in Newport News last week without a passport, permission to land as a seaman. According to the ruling the Mayor is permitted to land to reship on "any vessel bound for any foreign port or place, unless the Secretary of State directs that he be kept on his vessel."

Surprised at the failure of the Secretary of Labor to recognize the ruling of the State Department ordering deportation of O'Callaghan for attempting to enter without a passport, Acting Secretary of State Davis tonight announced that he would order an immediate investigation of the ruling.

LORD MAYOR IN HIDING.

Lord Mayor O'Callaghan was in Washington tonight but declined to be seen.

First indications of the conflict between the Labor and State departments over the case occurred when the Mayor was paroled by the Secretary of Labor without consultation with the State Department after O'Callaghan had taken an appeal from the order of deportation found by the immigration board in Norfolk.

Secretary Davis sought to obtain from Secretary Wilson recognition of the jurisdiction of the State Department in the case, arguing that the war-time powers gave the State Department the right to exclude O'Callaghan for entering without a passport.

ARGUE WARTIME POWERS.

Arguing on the question of wartime powers, counsel for O'Callaghan in a brief submitted to the Secretary of Labor, contended that their client came within the meaning of an executive order of the President defining seamen as those who follow seamanship or men who have signed a ship's articles.

He pointed out that the Lord Mayor had been employed as a seaman on the voyage after his presence had been discovered. This argument was accepted by the Secretary of Labor and included in the text of his decision today.

SHORT-LIVED QUIET.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

DUBLIN, Jan. 15.—The period of comparative quiet which began in Dublin at Christmas proved short-lived. During the last week there was a continuous succession of tragedies in which crown forces and persons identified with the Sinn Fein movement appeared to have suffered about equally.

The atmosphere now is similar to that in Cork before martial law was declared. The people are becoming afraid to venture out, owing to the fatalities among innocent civilians. The city is alive with rumors.

According to one report ambuscades against crown forces, which have been staged chiefly after the curfew hour, will take place at daylight, regardless of the risk of such attack to pedestrians, to force an extension of the martial law.

EXPECT MARTIAL LAW.

That martial law will be instituted generally is credited. The belief prevails that it will be put into effect in the next few days and be accompanied by the changing of the curfew hour from 10 to 8 p.m.

The military authorities were never more active in the streets than now; there is not only a marked increase in the number of raids on houses, but people walking in the streets are undergoing in increased numbers the ordeal of sudden challenge and search.

Notwithstanding the renewed peace talk appearing in the English press, the Irish people seem to have abandoned hope of an early settlement.

DE VALERA BUSY.

Eamonn de Valera is said to have spent a busy week conferring with his associates and attending at least one Cabinet meeting. It is said that the republican government will continue to function without interruption.

Regarding De Valera's delayed manifesto, it is said that it may not be issued until the end of next week. It is understood that it will contain a review of the situation as De Valera found it and perhaps deal with the result of the attempts to bring about peace negotiations.

WORLD DISARMAMENT MEETING IS FAVORED BY CONGRESSMEN.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The joint resolution requesting President Wilson to call a conference of the world nations to consider universal disarmament was approved today by the House Foreign Affairs Committee without a dissenting vote. The committee rejected, 9 to 2, an amendment by Representative Mason, Republican, Illinois, that invitations to participate in the conference be extended to Ireland and the Philippines.

Although Democrats on the committee voted to report the resolution to the House, they questioned the propriety of requesting President Wilson to act on the eve of his departure from office.

Representative Connally, Democrat, Texas, declared the proposal should be left over for consideration by the new President, adding that Mr. Wilson might not be disposed to issue the call because of a belief that it might embarrass his successor.

The vote was taken after Chairman Porter had explained that it was the purpose to have the resolution ready for Mr. Harding and that nobody had a thought of causing embarrassment to Mr. Wilson.

GEDDES RETURNS HOME.

British Ambassador to Consult With the Premier and Earl Curzon.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Recalled to London for the announced purpose of consulting with Premier Lloyd George and Earl Curzon, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Sir Auckland Geddes, British Ambassador, quietly slipped away last night and sailed today from New York for England. He was accompanied only by H. V. Tennant, his private secretary.

Lady Geddes remained with the children, bearing out the embassy statement that according to present intention the Ambassador will return next month.

It is understood there are several subjects to receive earnest discussion in London and it is said to be regarded as essential that Sir Auckland be given the benefit of the fullest disclosure of the views of the home officials before he undertakes to establish formal communications with the incoming administration here. Some matters receiving close attention by the British authorities, it is understood, probably will be made the subjects of express instruction from the Foreign Office in London.

CANAL TOLLS QUESTION.

Among these is the project to free American ships in the Panama Canal from tolls. The British government had believed this matter finally disposed of early in the Wilson administration, but now that the Republican party platform and the utterances of President-elect Harding have indicated a purpose to renew the effort to secure such privileges for American ships, it is regarded as possible that the British government will feel called upon to protest against any such invasion of what it has regarded as pledged treaty rights.

WILL DISCUSS TARIFF.

The Emergency Tariff Bill, especially in its probable effect on Canada, it is understood also will be among other subjects taken up, as well as the probable attitude of the Harding administration toward the proposed termination of a score of commercial treaties.

Another subject for negotiation is the refunding of conversion of the British war debt to America. Lord Chalmers, who was about to come to Washington to arrange this with the Treasury Department, has postponed his visit in view of Ambassador Geddes's absence.

Finally, it is believed probable that the British Premier wishes to acquaint himself with the exact state of public opinion in America regarding the naval programs and the Irish question.

BRIAND TO TAKE TRY AT OLD JOB.

Former Premier Accepts Task of Forming French Cabinet After Peret Fails.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

PARIS, Jan. 15.—Former Premier Briand will form a new ministry to succeed the Leygues Ministry, which resigned Wednesday. He had secured the collaboration of Laurent Bonneway, a leader of the national bloc, who led the attack on M. Leygues.

A forecast of the new ministry gives M. Bonneway the post of Minister of Justice; Louis Barthou, War; Paul Doumer, ..avy; Louis Loucheur or Charles Dumont, Finance.

M. Briand tonight confirmed the acceptance by M. Bonnevay of a portfolio.

M. Briand has been out of power since he was succeeded by Alexandre Ribot in 1917, in the middle of the war period. He does not belong to any of the groups forming the majority in the Parliament and it seems that if he succeeds in forming a Ministry he will have been brought back into power by the simple force of circumstances.

President Millerand sent for M. Briand this afternoon after Raoul Peret, president of the Chamber of Deputies had failed to form the "grand ministry" which he had in view.

While M. Briand may not try, as did M. Peret, to form a Cabinet composed for the most part of the highest lights in public life, it seemed probable he would encounter the hostility of the radicals and that he also might and the task a difficult one.

Ex-President Poincare's entry into the government is considered impossible in a Briand combination, the former executive having made it a condition of his acceptance of a post under Raoul Peret that Rene Viviani instead of M. Briand be given the Foreign Affairs portfolio.

TARIFF BILL IS AMENDED.

Measure With Ten Changes Will Come Before Senate Tomorrow.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The Fordney emergency tariff bill, broadened to include practically all farm products instead of the limited number as the measure passed the House, was approved today by the Senate Finance Committee, which voted to report it out Monday. Seven amendments were added today, making ten in all. No provisions of the original bill, however, were removed and rates on major products were left intact.

Opponents of the bill joined with the authors of amendments and forced the acceptance of most of them despite opposition from the bill's defenders.

It was said that the Democrats on the committee, except Senators Nugent of Idaho and Jones of New Mexico, stood against reporting the bill.

TO LAST TEN MONTHS.

There was no attempt to change the life of the bill's provisions—ten months. Several Republican Senators were said to have explained that the permanent tariff bill would be whipped into shape before the expiration of the emergency law and that the latter would then be automatically repealed.

There was no record vote on any of the seven amendments which were added to the bill in today's meeting, although Senator Simmons, Democrat, North Carolina, said the Democrats "generally voted against everything." One of the amendments agreed to yesterday, that placing a duty on certain dairy products, was changed today, a higher rate being accepted.

ACCEPTED CHANGES.

Amendments accepted today included:

Sugar $2.13 per hundred pounds until the retail price reaches 10 cents a pound.

Frozen meats of all kinds, 2 cents a pound; all other meats 25 per cent ad valorem.

Apples, 20 cents a box; cherries, 4 cents a pound.

Tobacco, Sumatra wrappers and fillers, $2.85 per pound; stemmed Sumatra, $3.50 per pound.

Butter and cheese and their substitutes, 8 cents a pound, instead of 6 cents, provided in an amendment accepted yesterday.

The length of long-staple cotton on which the tariff will be effective was reduced from 1 3-8 inches to 1 1-8 inches, the duty remaining at 7 cents a pound as the bill passed the House.

Cattle and sheep to be used for breeding purposes were exempted from the duty on imported animals.

Rice to be used in manufacture of canned goods was exempted from the tariff of 2 cents a pound levied in the House bill.

Attempts of several opponents of the bill to load it down with amendments dealing with extraneous subjects were unsuccessful.

In its tariff revision hearings today, the House Ways and Means Committee took up Schedule D of the Underwood act, comprising wood and wood products.

John H. Kirby of Austin, Tex., president of the Southern Tariff Association, asked the committee for a rate of 15 per cent ad valorem on imported lumber, saying that such a tariff would yield $6,000,000 annually in revenue and would not increase the lumber cost to American consumers.

GOODYEAR'S NEWS GOOD

Crisis is Passed by Local Company.

Report Shows Big Cut in Current Liabilities; Concern Sound, Going One.

Business Condition is Better; Funding of Chief Debt is Successfully Finished.

The Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of California is a solvent, sound, going institution.

The recent passing of a dividend on preferred stock is without significance, except as a recognition of a period of readjustment to new conditions in the tire industry.

Holders of this preferred stock are reminded that the dividends are cumulative, and must be paid in full before any dividends can be paid on the common stock, which is held by the Akron company.

Surplus production is being steadily reduced, and business has materially increased in volume during the last few weeks.

The item of current liabilities was reduced between Oct. 31, 1920, and Jan. 12, 1921, by $1,474,166.

The zero hour appears to have passed.

The long-promised financial statement of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of California will be in the hands of stockholders early this week. It contains much of cheer, and is the first authentic authorized review of the condition of the big concern that has become available since the parent company encountered rough going, which is said to have been the cause of many ill-advised and unfounded rumors of an existing condition much more serious than is warranted by the facts in the case.

"LIABILITY" AN ASSET.

The chief item listed under liabilities is $7,229,863.79, payable to the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Akron and evidenced by notes at 6 per cent, due Dec. 1, 1925, carrying an option to purchase $6,000,000 par value common stock on or before that date.

Instead of being a current liability, however, this item, by reason of the inspired long-term extension secured through the local directorate, becomes really a working capital, made available at a comparatively low rate of interest.

This sum is represented largely in raw and finished material, and stands for the initial ability of the Los Angeles corporation to proceed with the production of tires without entering the call money market with its high interest rates.

A few months ago it became apparent that the tire market was oversupplied, a condition brought about in part by the throwing the market of large quantities of tires made up by war babies and released for liquidation purposes at ruinous prices. This competition was felt more extensively in the East than in California.

Then came a period of stock reducing accompanied by some labor disturbances and general economic unsettlement, which went hand in hand with the readjustment of business, which has been going on throughout the country. Naturally this brought about a lessening of production, a laying off of hands, curtailment of earnings, and finally the necessity for refinancing by the parent company on a large scale. It is because of this combination of circumstances that the California company was called upon to go through a serious crisis before it was actually out of its swaddling clothes.

SITUATION IMPROVED.

This condition is now passing. For some time the output of tires from the Los Angeles factory has been held below demand and the surplus stock is rapidly being absorbed. Automobiles are still rolling, and tires are still being worn out. Every day the situation is improving, and by those in a position to know, it is said that the finances and management of the California Goodyear have been carefully conserved, and that with production gradually working back towards normal the outlook for a successful weathering of the storm is excellent.

Cyrus Peirce, head of Cyrus Peirce & Co., the investment bankers who have been closely allied with the financing of the corporation, told The Times yesterday, in commenting upon the balance sheet, that it had been authoritatively stated to him that the negotiations for the

ZION CITY (Ill.) Jan. 15.—Wilbur Glenn Voliva, overseer of the Christian Catholic Church in Zion, today issued advance sheets of "a handbook and a guide to hell."

"Every sinner is going to be punished with an overdose of his own sin," he declared. "A tobacco smoker will be locked up in a den full of tobacco smoke. LEGISLATORS PLEDGED TO DEFEAT OF UTILITY TAX.

Assurance Given That Stephens's Plan for Retrenchment Will Meet Popular Demands.

BY KYLE PALMER.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 15.—Determined to precipitate a showdown in the matter of taxation and its relation to economical administration of State affairs, legislators today announced that votes have been pledged in both houses sufficient to defeat the increase in public utility corporation taxes as recommended by the revenue and taxation committees of the Senate and Assembly.

It is asserted that the tax increase, which would add from $16,000,000 to $20,000,000 to State funds during the next biennium, will not receive a necessary two-thirds vote in either house.

A determined fight on the proposed new utilities tax is expected to open in the Senate, where, it was claimed today, fourteen votes are pledged against it. In the Assembly, it is said, opponents of the proposition now number twenty-nine.

DEAF EAR TO THREATS.

A deaf ear has been turned to administration threats that those legislators who oppose the utilities tax increase must expect to take responsibility for the imposition of a direct tax to meet a biennium deficit of approximately $14,000,000.

Senator Rominger of Long Beach was the first legislator to definitely announce his intention to vote against the recommendation of the Taxation and Revenue Committee. His lead was followed by Senators and Assemblymen from various parts of the State.

In his aggressive declaration on the subject, Senator Rominger said that he "would even be willing to vote for an ad valorem tax if it could wake the people up and cause them to act."

LEGISLATORS NEED SUPPORT.

Apparently having in mind the avalanche of protests pouring in from interests which seek to save their own particular departments and commissions from the effects of anticipated consolidations and eliminations, Senator Rominger said that legislators who sincerely hope to enforce economies will need far more support from their constituents than they now are receiving. This support undoubtedly would be forthcoming, he said, if the people understand that an ad valorem tax may become necessary unless drastic reforms are instituted.

Positive assurance was given today that hte governmental reorganization bill prepared by Gov. Stephens will meet the popular demand for retrenchment. It is even claimed that 300 or 400 State employees, including a number of high-salaried ones, will be detached from the pay rolls.

An immediate annual saving of approximately $1,000,000 will be made possible, it is said, through the adoption of the administration's consolidation plan, but there are legislators here who claim that a real reorganization bill could cut upwards of $7,000,000 a year from the cost of State government.

Administration spokesmen say that the larger figure is absurd and that such drastic retrenchment would cripple State activities. It is said that the Governor's plan pro-

RESTRICTION OF ALIENS A PREROGATIVE

Congressman Declares Nation Must Act in Immigration to Save Independence.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Restriction of immigration by legislation is a prerogative that cannot be questioned unless nations wish to lose their independence, Representative William N. Vaile of Colorado told members of the national Republican Club in an address here today.

Touching on the California Japanese situation, Mr. Vaile, who is a member of the House Committee on Immigration, asserted, "We should not fear war with any nation for exercising our right to determine whom we will admit to residence here."

He said that unrestricted influx of an unassimilable race, as he described the Japanese, would start the white race "on the toboggan slide."

"I contend," he continued, "that humanitarian reasons, or reasons of international comity, do not compel us to submit to such extinction.

"I am a great admirer of the Japanese race. I believe that those who have come here have been in the main of economic benefit, but they are unassimilable. Assimilation is not desired by either race and especially not by ours, because they, by working longer hours, by working in greater detail and by living on less, could crowd the white man out, is not to my mind any argument at all for allowing him to do so."

The speaker urged enactment of pending immigration legislation to keep out "reckless hordes from unfortunate countries of the world."

In adopting an immigration policy the United States should be careful not to embody anything that might incur the enmity of the eastern nations, said Dr. S. L. Gulick, secretary of the National Committee for Constructive Immigration Legislation.

He declared he was not advocating Asiatic immigration, but a policy that could be applied to all peoples without discrimination and in such a way that the eastern nations would not regard it as arrogant.

The government, he added, should admit at one time only so many persons as could be wholesomely transformed into American citizens.

EX-OFFICER REARRESTED.

Lieut. Cramblet, Jailed as Forger, Also Called Robber by Girls.

Lawrence F. Cramblet, a debonair young ex-Army lieutenant, who won both the police and the ladies with his glib talk, was rearrested late yesterday afternoon by Detective Sergeants Taylor and Jackson following his release by Detective Barnes, who had detained him earlier in the day on suspicion of robbery. Detectives Taylor and Jackson arrested him on a warrant charging the ex-officer with issuing worthless checks.

Later Detectives Jarvis and Hamilton stated that they will ask for a complaint from the District Attorney tomorrow charging Cramblet with the attempted robbery of two girl friends. He is now held in the County Jail in default of bond.

Cramblet first figured in local police records when he was arrested in New Orleans on Feb. 20, 1920, on a forgery charge from this city. He was accused by Eugene E. Murdock of 3825 West Twenty-eighth street, of having forged an indorsement to a check for $13.50, signed by C. G. Toland, and made payable to the company for which the former artillery officer was working. He was also accused of other peculations from his customers for magazine subscriptions while acting in this city as solicitor for a publisher's agent. He was able to clear himself on these charges.

Just prior to his first arrest, Cramblet was living in style with his bride of a few months at the Garden Court Apartments in Hollywood. He was a member of the Brentwood Country Club, the Los Angeles Athletic and other clubs and had been married only a few months to Miss Ruth Moreland, daughter of Dr. E. W. Moreland, a rich physician of Fort Wayne, Ind.

GIRLS ATTACKED.

Nothing more was heard of Cramblet until late Friday night when two girls sent in a plea for help to the police flying squad from near West Second street and Beaudry avenue. When detectives reached there, they found Miss Myrtle Hall of 1312 Maryland street, and her chum, Miss Winifred Smith, of 535 South Grand avenue. The two girls told the police they had been attacked by two men with white handkerchiefs for masks.

Miss Hall declared that they had tried to strip four diamond rings, valued at $2000, from her fingers, and had succeeded in tearing a diamond necklace from her neck. But they became frightened by the girl's outcries and fled. The string of the necklace broke and the diamonds scattered about near the scene of the attack where the detectives found them. Miss Smith was not attacked.

Cramblet, a friend of Miss Smith and an acquaintance of Miss Hall, was accused by the latter of having staged a fake hold-up. In a police machine, the two girls located his rooming-house near Sunset Boulevard and Logan street. The police went in and found the ex-officer in bed with an automatic revolver under his pillow.

HE IS RELEASED.

Although Miss Hall positively identified him as her attacker, Detective Barnes released Cramblet after an investigation. The ex-officer apparently felt that he had settled the matter and went home where he was rearrested later in the day by Detectives Taylor and Jackson.

Meantime, Detectives Jarvis and Hamilton had heard from three women, whose names they withheld, who claimed to have been victims of the ex-officer. The detectives say that the three women have furnished them sufficient evidence to sustain the robbery charge which they say they will file against Cramblet on Monday.

When questioned after his arrest, Cramblet told a reporter that he didn't want to talk any more.

Property Owner is Now Bearing More Than Share.

Seavey Denies Measure is Blow at Corporations.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 15.—Few legislators were in Sacramento today, and those who were wrote to the home folks or otherwise employed themselves in clearing up their desks, while the committee conferences were held over until Monday, and even the sibilant whisperings that usually enliven corridors and lobbies were unheard.

Gov. Stephens spent part of the day in his offices at the Capitol and conferred with delegations which wanted this or that legislation, or did not want it.

A committee bill, embodying the increased rates for taxes on corporations that were ordered by the joint Commission on Revenue and Taxation yesterday, was in course of preparation. Clyde L. Seavey of the State Board of Control, who has appeared before committee meetings in support of the proposed increases, explained today how the increases were ascertained, and why they fell on public utilities rather than elsewhere. Mr. Seavey said:

DEFERRED NEW RATES.

"The usual investigation that has been made each two years since this form of taxation came into existence in California, in 1910, was omitted in 1918 because the government was in control of public utilities, and a drive was made by the government at that time to defer any new rates as a war measure. The feeling was at that time that the rates might be raised somewhat if they were in any way to be changed.

"The information as to the existing distribution of the burden of taxation, whether it rested more heavily on corporations or on individual property owners, was sought by the State officials with no previous knowledge as to whether the burden on the corporations would be lightened or made heavier. There was no thought as to whether the findings might raise or decrease any particular rate.

PROPERTY OWNER PAYS.

"The figures were collected from records in the different counties and cities and in special districts that raised funds by ad valorem taxes, and when they were all gotten together in the first part of this month, they showed that the tax burden on the general property owner had increased 35 per cent.

"They might have shown an increase of 5 or 10 per cent, or they might even have shown a decrease, in so far as the State officers had any previous knowledge. While the general property owner was meeting this rise, the corporation rate stood unchanged.

"It is not a proposition of shoving an undue burden on the corporations and had absolutely nothing to do with any deficiency that may exist in the revenues of the State, but the question was purely one of equalization as between the public utilities and the private owners of taxable property.

TO PRO-RATE CHARGES.

"Representatives of the corporations have made the argument that the increase of $17,000,000 in State needs is due to a direct vote of the people, and that the people having created this charge, ought to pay it. There is no desire to make the corporations pay it, but there is a desire to see that they bear their share of all expenses of the State. If, after the taxes are equalized, there is not sufficient revenue to meet these needs, then the money must be raised in some other way; either by an ad valorem tax or from other new sources, as the Legislature may direct; and there is no intent of placing an unjust burden on the corporations, and no idea of doing so. We are simply trying to follow out the established forms of the taxation system and to pro-rate the charges justly between the individual and the corporate bodies

"Investigation has shown simply this: that in the course of time the tax burden borne by the individual has grown beyond that borne by the corporations; we want each to bear its just part; these rises, now in contemplation, do nothing more than to bring the corporations' share up to where they are paying taxes at the rate that is now charged against privately owned property."

SUICIDE PACT WAS BLUFF; COUPLE WED.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 15.—After having deceived the authorities and others into believing that they had leaped from a wharf recently in a suicide pact, Jennie May Harriman, 17 and Charles Hansen, 22 a sailor, reappeared at the home of the girl's parents today, but disappeared again when their proposed marriage was disapproved. Dorothy Newman, 20, who was with the pair during their first absence, remained with the girl's parents today and is assisting in the new search for them.

The spurious pact was made known when portions of Miss Harriman's and Hansen's clothing were found on a wharf with farewell notes signed by each of them.

LEAGUE'S FIRST BIRTHDAY.

Forty-nine Nations Now Are Members; Friends Point With Pride.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The League of Nations will be 1 year old today. Its membership now comprises forty-nine nations, representing, it is estimated, 1,260,000,000 people, or three-fourths of the world's population of 1,605,000,000.

Eleven additional States with a total population of 44,000,000 have formaly appllied for admission while it is known that Germany with its 60,000,000 people wants to join as soon as she is given a chance. This leaves about 300,000,000 of the world's inhabitants completely outside the League.

The League began its life when the Council met for the first time in Paris at the summons of President Wilson on Jan. 16, 1920, with twenty-three members. By the time the first meeting of the Assembly was held a few months ago, the membership had increased to forty-one. Eight have since been added.

HAS OWN HOME.

At the time of its birth, hte League had no quarters of its own, but today it is installed in its permanent seat at Geneva, where an old hotel has been transferred into the Palace of Nations. The General Secretariat, under Sir Eric Drummond, has a staff of more than 300.

There have been eleven meetings of the Council of the League, and most of the subsidiary or semi-independent bodies contemplated by the covenant have been brought into existence. These include the International Court of Justice, the first institution of its kind in the world's history; machinery for the registration of international treaties; commissions to deal with disarmament, mandates, economic blockade measures, public health, international statistics and the international labor office.

WORK IS VARIED.

Preparations have been made for bodies to deal with international communications and the suppression of the white slave traffic and the creation has begun of permanent machinery for the regulation of international credits and the economic rehabilitation of countries ruined by the war.

Friends of the League point to its intercession in the Poland-Lithuanian and Swedish-Finnish disputes, the latter over the Aland Islands, as among its achievements, although both cases await final settlement.

They also enumerate as standing to the League's credit the repatriation of more than 200,000 war prisoners and a campaign against typhus in Poland. They say it has furnished a government for the Saar district, formerly German, and that it has helped Danzig to assume its position as a free city under the League's special protection.

LEGISLATORS DEFY THREATS.

vides for progressive reorganization, in which eliminations and actual money saving will increase from year to year.

Legislators impatient for a more pretentious showing are prepared either to back the retrenchment measure of the Taxpayers' Association of California, or, if that measure is deemed inadequate, a third bill. Either in the Taxpayers' Association bill, prepared by Will H. Fischer, or in a third measure, certain legislators hope to attain retrenchments sufficient to obviate the necessity both for material tax increases or for an ad valorem tax.

EXPECT WIRE PULLING.

In this three-way fight, which is expected to develop next week, older members of the Legislature foresee an era of wire pulling and frenzied lobbying unsurpassed in the history of California.

"Undoubtedly," according to a Southern California member of the Assembly, "the Governor is going a lot farther in his consolidation program than most people have been willing to give him credit for, but it seems improbable that he will be able, single-handed, to cut and slash in the old-fashioned style demanded by the people."

Fischer denied that his bill was drawn for its psychological effect in forcing action from the administration and asserted tonight that his measure has not been called off, either temporarily or permanently. The flying of such plain signals of a gathering legislative storm gave rise to prediction today that the Legislature will not adjourn Friday, but will be held here in argumentative session until possibly January 28.

Administration leaders are expected to use all available strength in both houses, however, to force expeditious passage of desired measures during the first four days of the week to permit of adjournment for the constitutional recess, January 21, as originally planned.

Recalcitrant legislators will be subjected to persuasive pleas before the lawmakers convene Monday and it is possible the cogency of arguments may clear the way for what Assemblyman Harry Lyons of Los Angeles terms "that rough steam roller" of the administration.

Marked discouragement to those legislators who favored a combination of San Francisco and Los Angeles delegations for the purpose of gaining advantage over other sections of the State in any reapportionment measure that might be adopted, today came from Speaker Henry Wright of Pasadena.

"I would not favor," he said, "any combination whereby Los Angeles county, even at some gain for herself, should work an unfair arrangement upon any other section of California. Los Angeles county has had certain population increases that entitle the county to added representation both in the Assembly and the Senate; we shall insist upon the additions justly due us, and, further, we do not propose to go."

OFFER FROM BAY CITY.

The San Francisco proposal promised seven new Assemblymen and three new Senators to the Los Angeles delegation in exchange for support from Los Angeles for San Francisco's campaign to escape a loss of one Senator and one Assemblyman from the Bay City delegation.

Eligible voters who fail to register and cast their ballots in any election in California will be required to pay an annual poll tax of $9 if the Legislature adopts a compulsory voting measure to be introduced Monday by Assemblyman Merriam of Long Beach.

Woman Breaks Her Long Fast; Husband Firm.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DANVILLE (Ill.) Jan. 15.—Mrs. Ernest S. Harrington, who claimed to have been fasting for forty-eight days to influence her husband to join a church, ended her hunger strike today upon being advised by the Rev. G. S. Payne of Eldorado to take food.

The woman immediately consented and drank a glass of milk in the presence of the minister. She then said she felt better and would not resume her fast.

Ernest S. Harrington, for whom she declared she suffered the strike, says his wife has seen the error of her own way and is willing to resume her daily routine of life. He says he has not joine dthe church and will not do so until he gets ready.

Mrs. Harrington is not expected to suffer any ill effects from breaking her fast. Many physicians believed she had not been abstaining from food more than a week at most.

IGNORES ORDER OF DEPORTATION

which was to take place Monday, has been postponed to Wednesday, pending a hearing of an appeal for the quashing of the court-martial sentence. The court-martial found Murphy guilty of having led an attack in Cork October 8 against the military, when Murphy is alleged to have carried a bomb and a revolver.

Simultaneous attacks were made on a number of police barracks in Tipperary and Limerick counties early today, but without success. In consequence the police and military were reported to be extremely active there today. An attempt also was made to blow up the Kilzritain barracks near Bandon, County Cork, but the police appeared and drove away the attacking party.

Other parts of the country report similar incidents, including the ambushing of military.

ARSON PLOT FOILED.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, Jan. 15.—What the police allege to be another big Sinn Fein plot to destroy property in London was uncovered today when Patrick Kenny, an Irishman, was charged with participating in an attempt to murder two policemen and trying to ignite barrels of oil on the premises of the Vacuum Oil Company, where 60,000 barrels, containing 2,500,000 gallons of oil, are stored.

At 1 o'clock this morning three policemen discovered fifteen men lurking near the Vacuum company's premises, some of them apparently having just come from the yards. A fierce fight followed, in which it is alleged several shots were fired by the civilians. Kenny was arrested, but the others escaped.

Railroad Commission Issues Statement on Work.

Unreversed Decisions Prove Fairness of Acts.

Rate Payers Not Harmed by the Rulings.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 15.—The Railroad Commission announced today that it welcomed any honest, fair and impartial investigation by the State legislators of its decisions and acts. For the administration of the public utility law the commission declared it held itself to the strictest accountability and desired the fullest inquiry.

"We assert and are prepared to prove to any fair-minded person that the regulation of public utility rates by the commission from the time of enactment of the public utility law down to the present has been in the interest and for the benefit of the rate payers," the commission's statement said.

"Had we not granted necessary increases when conditions made them imperative we should have been as derelict of duty as we would be in failing to reduce rates when conditions warranted such decrease."

INCREASE 40 PER CENT.

Public utility rate increases have been held to an average of 40 per cent, including those granted during the period of Federal control according to the statement, while prices of various other commodities have advanced from 100 to 300 per cent.

If the Legislature decides that a large proportion of $17,000,000 additional revenue needed by the State should be obtained by increasing the taxes on utilities, the commission stated, it then would become the duty of the Railroad Commission under the law to allow such taxes to be reflected in the rates.

Out of eight-eight cases in the State and Federal courts arising from actions of the commission, seven are pending and only fourteen have been decided against the commission, according to its statement today.

RECORDS PROVE CASE.

"We believe that this record proves that the acts of the comission have been in accordance with established law and in conformity with well-defined principles of equity, justice and fairness," the statement continued.

"All of our acts are of record and are public documents, contained in 8542 formal decisions. Most of these are in printed form and widely distributed, and the supporting data is open to inspection.

"The principle that the people are entitled to public utility service at cost, plus a reasonable profit, based upon the value of the property wisely used in providing such service, has been adhered to rigidly.

"It might be interesting to conjecture what the increases in public utility rates would have been compared with what they have been had there been no State regulation during this abnormal period during and since the war."

FRENCH CABINET FACES PROBLEM.

generally escapes attention abroad that, despite his success with regard to Poland, Millerand went to Elysee palace as President of France a half-defeated man if success is the achievement of all that one starts out to do. More or less assisted by Leygues, his method has been to force a policy of some fixed sum screened by an unceasing public defense of a literal interpretation of the Versailles Treaty.

Such was the French policy just closed with the overthrow of Leygues. Since inability to solve the reparations problem implies upon the part of the French government inability to control the course of home and foreign policies, the gradual ruin of the ministry's prestige and authority will be easily understood. A fact hitherto secreted is that during the few of his days in office Leygues apparently without consultation with anybody took the risky initiative of communicating to the British government his resolve to abandon all hope of fixing a total of the joint German debt and declared that he should rest content with fixing five annual payments of 300,000,000 marks gold each, which he should call upon Germany to pay, pending the settlement of the whole reparations problem.

Of course, he selected such a solution because it allowed him to represent to Parliament that he really had not tolerated a curtailment of the ultimate French claims and that the plan merely postponed that day when an accurate and satisfactory settlement of Germany's capacity to pay would become possible.

DANGEROUS INITIATIVE.

This initiative on the part of Premier Leygues was very dangerous, as it is obvious that the longer France waits for the audit of her accounts the less she will be in a position to rally her allies to her support if she finds it necessary to attempt enforcement of her claims.

The detachment of America from anything like even the semblance of active participation in the enforcement of the Versailles Treaty indicates that before long France will have to choose between reducing her claims against Germany to insignificance or embarking upon the hazardous enterprise of separate military action such as would estrange her from her former friends.

Bandit Confesses; Police Recover a Fortune in Loot.

DALLAS (Tex.) Jan. 15.—The reported recovery of nearly $250,000 in Liberty Bonds and currency and the death of one of the bandits, were features tonight in the police investigation into last night's robbery by six bandits of a subpostoffice station here. The total taken was not known and four of the band remain at liberty.

W. S. Scrivner, one of the band injured when the bandits' car overturned near Fort Worth three hours after the robbery, led Dallas officers to a cache eight miles north of Fort Worth. There $200,000 in Liberty Bonds and $46,000 in currency was found in two registered mail sacks, according to the local police. Scrivner was arrested and brought here early today. He made a confession, the police said, implicating a "master mind" behind the robbery, whose arrest, detectives say, will cause a sensation.

Pat Murphy, alias Rufus Clemons, alias W. W. Matthews, another member of the band, was killed in the automobile accident. Acording to the alleged confession of Scrivner, police said, he and Murphy were returning to Fort Worth after having cached the loot. The four other members of the band had taken refuge in a house at Fort Worth.

In addition to the approximately $246,000 recovered near Fort Worth, more than $4000 of the stolen currency was found in a house in South Dallas today. Police searched the house on the strength of Scrivner's purported confession.

Extra precautions were taken by police to guard Scrivner here and on his trip to Fort Worth today. Feeling is intense over the shooting of three postal employees, who offered no resistance during the robbery. None was critically injured however, physicians said today.

Scrivner escaped from the Texas penitentiary, December 28.

CRIME WAVE IS EXPECTED IN FRANCE.

Sociologists Perturbed and Predict Revolution and Unorganized Rioting.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

PARIS, Jan. 15.—The total losses from robberies and burglaries in Paris last year amounted to 34,000,000 francs. Of this, 2,500,000 francs represents the losses of the French Ministry of Finance in treasury bonds and 700,000 forgeries of various kinds in connection with the drawing of soldiers' pay.

This is taken to indicate that France may expect a wave of crime similar to that which already has commenced in the United States, although as yet there have been no murderous attacks such as are said to be filling the American penitentiaries.

French sociologists are perturbed and declare that the increasing idleness and accumulation of debts are responsible and that unless the crisis is solved by the government before spring anything from a revolution to a state of unorganized rioting can be expected.

Apart from the raid on the underground vaults of the treasury, the average loss in burglaries, etc., is said to have been less than 10,000 francs. The fact is that hardly a day passes now without the press reporting hold-up of taxi chauffeurs, working girls and late pedestrians, but in only a few cases is any bodily harm done.

Chicago Bandits Have Poor Day; Several Nabbed.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—Chicago's bandits had poor luck today. At almost every turn they were frustrated or captured.

Albert C. Clark, State Senator, nearly lost $10,000 worth of liquor. Four thieves, one of them disguised as a maid servant, gained entrance to the home and locked occupants in their rooms. Before the robbers could complete loading their motor trucks the imprisoned family's cries had aroused neighbors. The police arrived and captured the quartet.

A private banker threw up a pistol instead of his hands and routed four bandits who later were arrested when they attempted a payroll robbery.

Two robbers were outwitted by a butcher who was locked in an ice box. Previously he had hidden his money in the ice box and cut a slit in the door by means of which he released himself after the pair had left.

COMMITTEE FOR DEVASTATED FRANCE CLEARS FORTUNE; MITCHELL SEEKS NEW BOUT.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The American Committee for Devastated France today announced it had realized $90,000 from its management of the boxing bout last night, in which Benny Leonard, lightweight champion, scored a technical knockout over Richie Mitchell in the sixth round.

The gate receipts amounted to $150,000, the largest in the history of lightweight boxing, of which $40,000 went to Leonard and $20,000 to Mitchell. The crowd of about 14,000 was made up not only of the usual quota of fisctic fans, but a galaxy of society folk wearing glittering starched shirts and evening gowns. Miss Anne Morgan, chairman of the committee, who was given a rousing ovation by the crowd, declared she was "crazy about" the fight.

Fans were still discussing the bout today, which all experts declared was one of the greatest encounters in a decade. Discussing the blow Mitchell delivered in the first round, which made the champion stagger down for a count of nine, Leonard said:

"It was a dying lunge. It caught me fairly and it certainly bothered me. It came so unexpectedly. Oh, yes, Mitchell always was a dangerous man."

"I want to fight him again," declared Mitchell. "I almost had him licked, but I got careless. Next time I will certainly do it."

Germany Bound to be Good Now, Says Dernburg.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

MILAN (Italy) Jan. 14.—There is no possibility of Germany ever attempting a war of revenge, having been cured forever of her old militaristic spirit, Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, former German Minister of Finance, emphatically told the delegates at the closing session of the League of Nations societies conference here today.

Dr. Constantine Dumba, former Austro-Hungarian Ambassador to the United States, in reviewing the economic situation of Austria, declared that not even a union with Germany could save Austria economically, but said he believed such a union was inevitable eventually. To this Dr. Dernburg replied that Germany could not help Austria economically at the present time as she was too badly off herself.

The delegates accredited by the Russian League of Nations society were admitted to the conference simply as spectators, their organization not having been recognized officially.

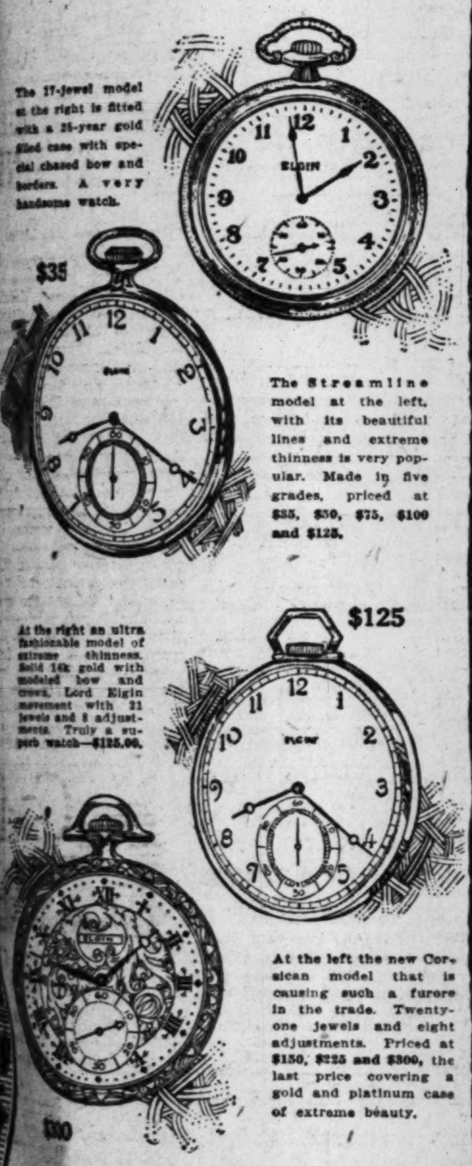
Smart Elgins

The Talk of the Watch World

For many years the Elgin National Watch Company has been famous for the sturdiness and dependability of its products. Very recently it has brought out several new models that, without sacrificing anything in strength or reliability, have set a new mark in artistic beauty. They are made extra thin, the lines are most graceful, while the prices demonstrate beyond question the fairness of the Elgin policy.

We should greatly enjoy an opportunity of showing and explaining in detail the many exclusive features of these splendid watches.

For "time-to-the-second" during business hours, call our Watch Department, 60869



The 17-jewel model at the right is fitted with a 25-year gold filled case with special chased bow and borders. A very handsome watch.

The Streamline model at the left, with its beautiful lines and extreme thinness is very popular. Made in five grades, priced at $35, $50, $75, $100 and $125.

At the right an ultra fashionable model of extreme thinness. Solid 14k gold with modeled bow and crown. Lord Elgin movement with 21 jewels and 8 adjustments. Truly a superb watch—$125.00.

At the left the new Corsican model that is causing such a furore in the trade. Twenty-one jewels and eight adjustments. Priced at $150, $225 and $300, the last price covering a gold and platinum case of extreme beauty.

MARSHALL TALKS ON IRRIGATION.

Originator of Project Speaks in Kern County.

Tells Plan to Furnish Water to 800,000 Acres.

Sale of Power Would Pay All Interest Charges.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

BAKERSFIELD, Jan. 15.—Plans for irrigating 800,000 acres of agricultural lands in Kern county were outlined tonight at a meeting here by Col. Robert B. Marshall, former chief geographer of the United States Geological Survey and originator of the irrigation project which bears his name.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the Kern County Chamber of Commerce. It was the first of a series of three gatherings Col. Marshall will address in Kern county under the auspices of the chamber. He will speak Monday at Taft and at Delano Tuesday evening.

Former Congressman C. A. Barlow, president of the California State Irrigation Association, which is furthering the Marshall plan, presided over the meeting and introduced the speaker.

Marshall spoke in part as follows: "California has the land and the climate," said Col. Marshall, "but it needs the water, the foundation upon which everything rests, to make it the greatest commonwealth in the world. That is our aim in offering to the people the Marshall plan.

"The great area of land that would be reclaimed in this county, amounting to more than 800,000 acres, lies chiefly to the south and west of Bakersfield. Under the plan Bakersfield will be the chief beneficiary of the diversion of the San Joaquin River to the extreme south end of the valley.

"The third canal of the system, originating on the San Joaquin River at an elevation of 1000 feet, flows southward to a point east of Bakersfield and encircles the fertile land area of the county. This canal would also draw water from the Kings and Kaweah rivers, each of which have splendid reservoir sites in which tremendous volumes of water could be impounded.

"The cost would be large," Col. Marshall said, "but the sales of water and power will take care of all the interest charges and refund the investment over a period of fifty years."

The State will be required to stake its credit only. No additional burden will be put upon the taxpayer.

Under the plan, Los Angeles county would be furnished water from Kern River.

CRISIS PASSED IN LOCAL COMPANY

funding of the $7,229,853 due the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Akron had been successfully consummated and that five-year notes had been issued and accepted in settlement of this account.

Mr. Peirce said further that he understands that the item of current liabilities of $2,741,097 had, on January 12, been reduced to $1,266,931, with, of course, a corresponding reduction of current assets.

"The balance sheet," he said, "with these reductions, evidences the soundness of the California corporation. The holders of the preferred stock should bear in mind that the dividends on this stock are cumulative, and must be paid in full before any dividends can be paid on the common stock. Information has been received that the business of the company has materially increased in volume during the last few weeks."

The balance sheet which is as of Oct. 31, 1920, was presented to the directors of the Akron company on December 29 and therefore gives effect to the extension of the $7,229,600 account with the Goodyear Akron company, agreed to by the directors at that time.

WHAT REPORT SHOWS.

The high spots in this report covered by the totals under the several headings are found to be as follows:

Capital assets including land, buildings, machinery and equipment, automobiles and trucks, furniture and fixtures and construction work not yet classified, $10,624,897.13.

Goodyear gardens, land and improvements, $1,124,135.43.

Current assets, including 671,214 pounds of rubber hypothecated to secure notes, and including $4,658,686.99 worth of finished goods at cost, accounts receivable, cash in banks, et cetera, $8,859,801.83. This item has since been reduced by $1,474,000.

Deferred charges, which includes factory expense, supplies, prepaid insurance and taxes, advances for dividends to Goodyear Textile Mills Company, and miscellaneous, $1,307,714.86, establishing a total of $21,942,476.68.

Liabilities include $12,000,000 capital stock of which $8,000,000 is preferred and $4,000,000 common; $7,229,863.79 due the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Akron, and explained above: $2,741,097.81 in current liabilities including notes payable for cash, construction, rubber, and to the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of Canada, Ltd., $1,635,143.94, and accounts payable $1,105,953.87 covering vouchers, invoices, excise tax, and $260,977.84 to the Goodyear Textile Mills Company. This total of $2,741,097.81 has been reduced by $1,474,000, according to Mr. Peirce.

Coming to the surplus before providing for 1920 income and profits tax the single red ink balance is encountered, and this only for $28,484.92, which, it is pointed out, is not heavy when compared with the $12,000,000 capitalization.

The amount allowed to Akron out of profits of territory from July 12 to Nov. 1, 1919, is $500,128.76.

The profit for the year to Oct. 31, 1920, before inventory adjustments is $703,525.48.

Adjustments of inventories of raw materials and work in process to reduce rubber to 26 cents per pound and cotton to 60 cents per pound $635,000.

Dividends amounting to $597,139.16 were paid and the slight deficit resulted.

It is further stated as a part of the statement that the company has agreed to accept 518,482 pounds of rubber now arriving, payment for which, amounting to $246,853.86, will fall due about February 15.

STRICKEN UPON ARRIVAL HERE.

One-Time Daughter-in-Law of Mark Hanna is Victim of Apoplexy.

The body of Mrs. May Harrison Hanna, one-time daughter-in-law of Mark Hanna and divorced wife of Dan R. Hanna of Cleveland, who died Friday night in the Beverly Hills Hotel following a stroke of apoplexy, will be taken back to that city this morning by Mrs. H. Crandall, companion to Mrs. Hanna, for interment. Her former husband, wealthy newspaper publisher, will meet the body there.

Mrs. Hanna, who was 54 years old, was divorced from her husband several years ago and had three children—Carl, Mark and Dan—living in Cleveland. She had just arrived at the hotel and was dressing when stricken shortly before noon. She remained unconscious for nine hours, dying shortly after 9 o'clock Friday night. She was noted as a horsewoman and for her interest in outdoor sports, which she had enjoyed for several winters here.

QUARREL OF CATS DISTURBS BEACH.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VENICE, Jan. 15.—Two cats attempted to settle a disagreement on the beach below Mildred avenue yesterday afternoon, their quarrel ending in a mob scene and a call for the police.

The pussies had hissed several stinging remarks at each other, the sand was beginning to fly and people sitting on the beach moved away. A pelican drowsing at the waters edge was roused from his lethargy by the shrieks of the felines and waddled excitedly into the fray. A flock of seagulls also attracted lowered and participated. There followed such a mixture of me-ows and squawks, and flying of feathers and sand as the fish of the Pacific had never seen before.

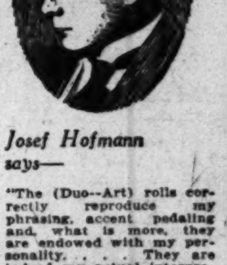
Ignace Paderewski says—

"I avail myself of this opportunity to congratulate you again on your splendid achievement in the production of the Duo-Art Piano. This instrument is without question greatly superior to any other of its kind, and I shall be glad indeed to have my playing reproduced with such manifest fidelity."



Josef Hofmann says—

"The (Duo-Art) rolls correctly reproduce my phrasing, accent pedaling and, what is more, they are endowed with my personality. . . . They are indeed my actual interpretation with all that that implies. My enthusiasm for this wonderful instrument has increased as my familiarity with it has grown."

The

DUO-ART

Reproducing Piano

WHAT manner of piano is this, that Paderewski calls "a splendid achievement," that Hofmann describes as "wonderful;" over which musicians of such world-wide celebrity become enthusiastic and give gladly of their time and talent to make more valuable?

It is the miraculous piano of the future come to us now. It is the piano that gives everything in music that could be asked or hoped for.

We may imagine the emotions of some music lover—someone who appreciates the finest, most inspiring of all the arts—but who cannot play and who lives in a music-less home.

Some day he visits Aeolian Hall and is shown the Duo-Art. He sees a beautiful pianoforte—a magnificent Steinway or Weber, Grand or Upright. He hears it played by hand and its rich, deep musical voice decides him to buy it. Though he cannot play himself, he knows that sometimes friends will come and play for him.

And then the wonderful nature of the Duo-Art is revealed to him—people will indeed come to play this piano for him. Not people who play tolerably well, however, not amateurs fairly gifted, but the greatest piano masters of the whole wide world,—the famous artists all musicdom flocks to hear.

TROUBLE COMES ON INDIAN BILL.

Dissatisfaction in House Over Appropriations.

Death Penalty for Gun Toters is Suggestion.

Immigration Bill Likely to be Passed By.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Dissatisfaction broke loose in the House today during consideration of the annual Indian appropriation bill over what was described as the concentration into the hands of one committee of authority to direct appropriation bills. The Indian appropriation bill was riddled, sections being stricken out on points of order by Chairman Snyder of the Indian Affairs Committee, which, until this year, has framed the bill.

A subcommittee of the Appropriation Committee, Representative Snyder contended, had exceeded its authority in recommending appropriations not authorized by existing laws. He charged that the subcommittee had attempted to inject new legislation into the bill.

Representative Mondell, Republican leader, charged that Mr. Snyder was leading a "post-mortem fight on the budget." The power to draw up all appropriation bills, Mr. Mondell said, was given to one committee in the interests of economy and efficiency.

DEATH PENALTY.

Death penalty for persons convicted of committing crimes by the use of weapons was proposed today by Representative Summers of Texas as a means of checking crime. He said much action was necessary to make human life more secure.

"When the offense of robbery, burglary or theft is committed with firearms," he said, "it should be possible to inflict the death penalty, and the Legislature now in session should so provide.

"This crime wave has resulted in part from the war. Automobiles afford the facility."

BOARD HEAD TALKS.

Legislation restricting speculative transactions and "hedging" in the grain today would upset the whole machinery of grain distribution and open the way to domination by a few powerful interests B. L. Hargis, president of the Kansas City Board of Trade today told the House Agriculture Committee considering legislation to regulate grain exchanges.

Conceding the advantages of the "hedging" practice, he said, the grain speculator, or the dealer in futures, must be recognized as an indispensable cog in the machinery of grain distribution.

Declaring the present system of grain trading not only did not reduce the farmer's profits, but offered him the indispensable advantage of being able to market his grain in the absence of actual consumption demand, Mr. Hargis charged that "certain of our southwestern millers" in urging before the committee the abolition of futures trading were not "actuated by altogether altruistic motives."

PLAN MODIFIED BILL.

Proponents of legislation prohibiting immigration for a year or longer, said today they planned to introduce the House bill in modified form as an amendment to the emergency tariff bill when that measure comes before the Senate.

Several members of the Senate Immigration Committee said it was improbable that the committee would report the House bill or that they would recommend passage at the present session of any temporary legislation restricting immigration.

PHELAN BACKS MOVE.

Further progress of the resolution which the Senate passed yesterday ordering the War Department to cease recruiting until the Regular Army has been cut down to 150,000 men, was blocked today by Senator Phelan (Dem.,) California.

The Senator gave formal notice of his intention to offer a motion for reconsideration of the measure.

Members of the Military Affairs Committee said there was little prospect of a change in the Senate sentiment.

START NEW OIL WELL WEST OF EL CENTRO.

LONG BEACH INVESTORS WILL EXPERIMENT ON TRACT NEAR DIXIELAND.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

EL CENTRO, Jan. 15.—Well No. 1 on the tract near Dixieland and Coyote Wells, of the Southwestern Petroleum and Pipe Line Company of Long Beach, was spudded in this morning and marks the first movement to develop an oil field to the west of El Centro.

The new well is started on range 11 south, six and one-half miles west of Dixieland and three-quarters of a mile north of the highway.

U. E. Woodruff, secretary of the company, and a party of friends, who are registered at the Barbara Worth Hotel, El Centro, motored out to the well this morning to be present at ground-breaking ceremony.

The Southwestern Company is the owner of 2560 acres in one tract all within twenty miles west of El Centro, and the oil experts and the geologist who made examination of the property have pronounced the location and the indications to be favorable.

The main reliance of the officers and stockholders of the company is placed, however, in the fact that a well sunk for water, some weeks ago, produced a strong flow of gas before the water stratum was hit.

The officers of the company, all of whom reside at Long Beach, are: Drexel Clarkson, president; Hugh D. Lester, vice-president; U. E. Woodruff, secretary and sales manager, and Walter J. Balaam, treasurer.

WOUNDED VETERANS QUARTERED IN SHACKS

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15. — Half the sick and wounded soldiers of the World War are quartered in hospitals of "flimsy and inflammable construction," Surgeon-General Cumming of the Public Health Service has informed Senator Ashurst, Democrat, of Arizona, who pleaded today with the Senate to provide additional hospital facilities for the soldiers.

Senator Ashurst said an appropriation of $30,000,000 would be required to provide 30,000 additional beds and equipment for the health service.

"Our ex-service men fought in a cause as high and as noble as ever animated the human breast," the Senate said, "and no Senator ought to be frigid or indifferent to their sufferings."

HUSBAND CAUSES ARREST OF AUTHER.

ELOPING CHEMIST HELD ON CHARGE PREFERRED BY WOMAN'S SPOUSE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—Pierre Paul Auther, Highland Park chemist, who eloped with Mrs. Philip Franzen of Madison, Wis., several weeks ago, was arrested today on the warrant charging larceny sworn out by the woman's husband. Auther waived extradition rights and said he would willingly go to Madison and prove his innocence.

Auther, who had been living in a hotel with his wife and child, with whom he had been reconciled after police found him and Mrs. Franzen in St. Louis, expressed surprise at the arrest.

"I can easily disprove this larceny charge," Auther said. "Mr. Franzen and I talked amicably for two hours the night Mrs. Franzen and I left Madison and we parted on the best of terms. Mr. Franzen gave his wife a check for $100 to help defray her expenses and to clear all claims she might make upon him. Mrs. Franzen cashed that check herself."

MILWAUKEE, Jan. 15. — Mrs. Philip M. Franzen of Madison, who recently attracted attention through her escapade with Pierre Paul Auther, Highland Park, Ill., has returned to Milwaukee from Chicago.

Mrs. Franzen says she will make her home here for a short time, and will leave her future "to fate and faith."

War Finance Body Considers Loans to Back Exports.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15. — The War Finance Corporation, revived by an act of Congress, which was passed over President Wilson's veto, is now functioning. It announced today that it was prepared to consider applications for loans to finance exports in the same measure that it considered advances prior to the suspension of its activities last May.

In so far as necessary, the corporation said, personal hearings will be given to prospective borrowers. In submitting applications for loans applicants should set forth in detail all facts relating to their financial condition, the purposes of the proposed advances and full information to enable the corporation to determine whether the applicants are eligible under the law to receive loans.

MEXICO CITY SEEKS TO SAVE BOY'S NECK?

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 15.—Belief that the Mexican government has approached the State Department at Washington in an effort to save the life of Simon Ruiz, a 17-year-old boy, who is sentenced to hang in San Quentin prison January 28, was expressed today by Alberto Mascarenas, Mexican Consul-General. Ruiz is a native of the State of Jalisco, Mex., and lived there until last August.

He pleaded guilty to the murder of a section foreman in San Bernardino county and the date of his execution was set for January 14. He was granted a two weeks' reprieve after Mascarenas personally visited the Governor in his behalf.

OBREGON PLANS CABINET CHANGE

Minister of Foreign Affairs Wants to Resign.

Great Britain Joins in Protest of Mine Decision.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 15.—President Obregon contemplates an immediate reorganization of his Cabinet which will affect at least seven portfolios, it is said by newspapers here.

It is known that Dr. Cutberto Hidalgo, Minister of Foreign Affairs, wishes to tender his resignation in order that he may press his condidacy for the Governorship of the State of Hidalgo. Alberto J. Pani is named as his probable successor.

Gen. Enrique Estrada is said to be contemplating his resignation from the War Department, and newspapers say he will be succeded by Gen. Angel Flores. Adolfe de La Huerta, former Provisional President, is also credited with a determination to retire from the Treasury Department to take up his duties as Governor of the State of Sonora. Santana Almada, now president of the Monetary Commission, has been mentioned as the next Minister of the Treasury.

Pasqual Ortiz Rubio, Minister of Public Works, is about to resign, it is asserted.

EXPECT BANK TO REOPEN.

Belief was expressed in financial circles that the Mercantile Banking Corporation, which closed its doors last week during the financial crisis, was sound and would open for business next week under Federal supervision.

Great Britain has joined the United States in protesting against the recent decision of the Mexican Supreme Court in a case involving the ownership of the Naica Mining Company, whose property is located in the State of Chihuahua.

LABOR CONGRESS SPEEDS UP.

Delegates to the congress of the Pan-American Federation of Labor today determined to act speedily on all reports submitted by the Resolutions Committee, select the city where the next meeting will be held, elect officers and conclude the deliberations of the present session, which began here last Monday.

It seemed probable that Samuel Gompers would be re-elected president of the federation. The choice ot the next meeting place was said to lie between Guatemala City and Cartagena, Colombia.

Assertions came from Salvadorean, San Domingan and Colombian delegates that the United States was pursuing an imperialistic policy in its dealings with San Domingo and Nicaragua.

AMERICA CRITICIZED.

This found voice in a long resolution introduced by Jose Kunhardt, a San Domingan delegate, declaring the presence of American forces in the island had abridged civil, industrial and political rights of San Domingans, and cited specific instances of alleged military misrule. It asserted that the right of workers to strike had been denied and that unjust sentences to prison had been imposed.

The resolution concluded by directing the president of the federation to send immediately a telegram to President Wilson, the President of the United States Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives, "demanding immediate relief for the people of San Domingo."

Mr. Gompers announced he was studying the wording of such a telegram and would probably forward it today.

FAMOUS DIVA WEDS PIANIST.

Galli-Curci and Samuels Marry in Minneapolis.

Ceremony Modest One in Home of Groom's Parents.

Marriage Makes Singer American Citizen.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 15.—A famous coloratura voice—made for the most intangible, exquisite notes of operatic arias—today in Minneapolis pronounced the oldest, most familiar words known to civilization. Amelita Galli-Curci, whose voice has thrilled thousands, today made a golden aria of the simple annunciatory voice in which she promised to love honor and cherish an American citizen — one of Minneapolis' boys—who is, first of all, in her eyes, the man who has won her heart, and second, a talented pianist and composer recognized as one of the gifted musicians of the day.

The marriage, upon which the eyes of the entire musical world were turned, was performed in a modest suburban home where no great swarm of carriages waited, and no striped awning gave impressive notice of unusual happenings within. In the comfortable, homelike living-room of the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Samuels, parents of the groom, where the subtle fragrance of roses gave sole evidence of important festivities, the vows of the two young people were spoken while only a few friends looked on.

MUSIC IS ABSENT.

There was no music at all, except the irrepressible liquid thrill of the diva's voice as she murmured the solemn promises.

Madame Galli-Curci wore a gown designed by herself for her wedding. It was of soft pastel gray taffeta, draped in silver lace with trimmings of Kolinski tails. She carried a bouquet of orchids. There were no bridal attendants.

Dr. Harry P. Dewey of the Plymouth Congregational Church performed the wedding service.

By the ceremony in which she became Mrs. Homer Samuels, the Chicago Grand Opera Company prima dona also became an American citizen. A year ago she took out her first naturalization papers, but by her marriage to Mr. Samuels, application for second papers is not necessary.

The wedding day of their son to Mme. Galli-Curci also marks for Mr. and Mrs. Charles Samuels the anniversary of their marriage thirty-six years ago. It also is the thirty-second anniversary of the birthdays of the groom and his twin brother, Dr. Harvey C. Samuels.

"I shall continue to sing and Mr Samuels will continue to play so long as we can be fair to ourselves and to the public," the bride said today. "We expect to spend our vacations at our cottage in the Catskills where we will study and work on new programs." Mrs. Samuels will continue to sing as Amelita Galli-Curci.

The bridal pair will leave tonight for Indianapolis, where they are to appear in concert tomorrow night. Their honeymoon—the real one—will come next summer, and it will be a Minnesota honeymoon.

The romance of the pair began last summer, they say, when Mme. Galli-Curci went to Paris after they had had several months of constant work together. They each found then how much their happiness was bound up in the other. Mr. Samuels has been Mme. Galli-Curci's accompanist for several years.

POPE BENEDICT GIVEN CREDIT.

Efforts Bring Resumption of Peace With France.

Feeling Against Vatican Was Bitter Before War.

Restored Relations Will Aid Missions in East.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ROME, Jan. 15.—The resumption of diplomatic relations between the Vatican and France is due mainly to Pope Benedict. Once France had decided to make peace with the church, the Pontiff personally directed the negotiations. Benedict XV, like his friend, the late Cardinal Rampolla, is and always has been essentially pro-French, even when the French government was not only anti-Vatican, but essentially anti-Catholic.

This feeling of antagonism toward the Pope and Catholicism was bitter just before the war broke out in 1914 The French were then a little tired of this continued animosity, but were not in a position to change the feeling of parliamentary circles.

When war was declared and the nation was threatened with the fate of 1870, the government was forced to change its policy, as it needed the help not only of the Protestants, but of the Catholics as well. All classes, no matter what their faith, rushed to save the country. From all parts of the world the French monks and priests hurried to France at the call of duty.

FRENCH LAW FORGOTTEN.

The French law of separation was forgotten. The government, in dealing with the religious needs of the army, adopted all those measures which it knew should be applied, without consulting the House of Deputies, as they knew perfectly well that the feeling was still anti-Catholic.

When England appointed a minister to the Vatican, French governmental circles discussed the advisability of appointing an ambassador or minister for the duration of the war. Delcasse himself decided that it should be done, but the president of the council, Viviani, shelved the proposal, as he was afraid that its discussion in Parliament would provoke trouble. Instead, he agreed to arrange that the British minister should represent Entente interests at the Vatican. This was satisfactory until the question of French interests in Palestine were under discussion. Then the French government realized that a minister of another, even though friendly, power could not handle the matter as well as a Frenchman.

HELD IN ABEYANCE.

Pope Benedict, although willing to resume diplomatic relations, could not in any way enter into negotiations after the abrupt and brutal manner in which the separation of church and state in France had been conducted. For four years the matter remained in abeyance, until 1918, when Clemenceau was Prime Minister. It was Clemenceau who, in 1915, had ordered his subordinates to conduct the papal muncie to the frontier, and who later also had obliged the President of the French republic to refuse the invitation to the TeDeum at the happy ending of the war. While he was in power he strained every point to prevent the sending of an ambassador to the papal court.

In order to strengthen his cause, he arranged that a series of articles against the Pope should appear in the Revue De Paris. But France had just finished one war and her people were not desirous of seeing the nation split into two on account of religious differences. The elections which were then held were based on this unity in peace as in war.

CLEMENCEAU OPPOSED.

Even Clemenceau, himself, after the election of the candidates of the Blocce, issued a proclamation at Strasbourg affirming that no French citizen would be at a disadvantage on account of his religious principles.

Still Clemenceau was opposed to the resumption of relations, especially as he saw that the old rancor was no longer alive in the breasts of the new Deputies. He clung to his point and thereby lost the Presidency. In his stead Deschanel was elected and made an enemy of the old Premier by calling Millerand to the post of president of the council.

Millerand's first important act was a speech in which he mentioned that efforts were being made to resume relations with the Vatican. Not a voice of protest was heard and a bill was presented asking for funds for the re-establishment of the embassy.

DOUCET SENT AS ENVOY.

Signor Doucet was sent to Rome as negotiator. France, as everyone knows, sent Gabriele Hanotaux and his suite to the canonization of Joan of Arc as ambassadorial representatives of the French republic. But Clemenceau, althought defeated, was not content to remain quiet, and during the time Ambassador Hanotaux was in Rome a great deal of intriguing was done by Clemenceau and his followers.

The Vatican received the negotiator, but was not inclined to sign a new concordat on the lines of the old one, though it agreed to certain concessions.

The opposing parties managed to have their friends appointed on the commissions which were presenting the question to the house. The opposition managed to have the matter discussed several times, and once it was only saved by one vote, the idea being to save it until the next general election. This project has been before the house since last March for discussion and only successfully passed now.

AGITATION IS STARTED.

The last effort of Clemenceau's party was during the vacation, when agitation was started against the new law. During the discussion all parties were heard, from M. Noblemeir and Abbe Lemire to the Socialists, Paul Bancour and Louis Peuchis.

It was while the discussion was in progress that Free Mason member, friend of Clemenceau, endeavored to speak against the Pope. Deputy Director Gailhard loudly protested that no one during the war had done his duty so well to all his flock as Pope Benedict, "and I, who have lost three sons in the war, can say this," he added. The measure passed with a heavy majority.

Thus religious peace has been re-established in France. This will improve the conditions of the missionaries in the East, as now they will have protection whereas before they had really no government to whom they could apply, as the Italian representatives never in any way help if they can manage to get out of the difficulty. Having French protection in the East will improve matters for thousands of Italian missions.

NEWS AT THE STATE CAPITAL.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 14.—A ray of hope for the guardians of the public exchequer can be seen penetrating over a darkened landscape of finance by State Controller Chambers, due to revenue of almost $1,000,000 which it is estimated will be owing California by the Federal government at the end of 1921, under the provisions of the Oil Land Leasing bill.

Based on past production of oil, Chambers estimates money already due the State amounts to approximately $700,000. Within the next year he predicts this amount will be increased by $225,000.

In just what way the revenue will be collected has not been determined, the Controller says, although it is hoped to effect the transfer in time for use by the State during the next biennium.

The estimate is based upon an investigation of the amount of oil produced on government leased lands. In making the investigation, Chambers has the assistance of Federal officers and State Mineralogist Hamilton.

California highway tree planting may receive impetus in the immediate future by adoption of a definite standard highway plan of planting, now being drafted by a special committee named by the State Highway Commission and the State Forestry Department.

Beautification of the State highways from the Oregon line to the Mexican border, and from the Sierras to the Pacific, is the prime purpose of this committee.

The evils of the past, consisting of promiscuous planting, without proper maintenance, will be corrected in the new plan, which will provide rules and regulations regarding planting and upkeep.

No serious delay in furnishing 1921 plates for automobiles will result from the burning of the Los Angeles plant which is manufacturing plates for California, according to Superintendent of the State Motor Vehicle Department Chenu.

Chenu says his department is fairly well fixed with plates, and he believes new ones will be available before the present supply runs out.

Supplies of all kinds purchased by the State through the purchasing department for institutions, boards and commissions, cost $11,335,322.86 during the past two years, according to the biennial report of State Purchasing Agent McMillin.

The purchase of groceries cost $685,996.66; meat and provisions, $1,380,551.30; tobacco, $83,513.46; liquor and spirits, $5082.29; automobiles, $113,300; auto accessories, $7929.47; tires, $25,318.28.

ALLEGED BOOTLEGGER CHEWS UP EVIDENCE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

RICHMOND (Va.) Jan. 15.—A plot to capture an alleged bootlegger failed today when Mrs. Mollie Richardson chewed up and swallowed the evidence, a marked $5 bill. The three officers on the job sent a "spotter" in with the bill to purchase a pint of liquor, but reported later that they had only succeeded in losing the money.

REDS IN CLASH AT CONVENTION.

Fist Fights Among Delegates Are Numerous.

Socialists and Communists in Uproar.

Mention of Liebknecht Starts Near Riot.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LEGHORN (Italy) Jan. 15.—Communism and Socialism matched forces today at the Italian Socialist convention. Tumultous scenes were enacted during the uproar; fist fights among delegates were numerous.

Every mention of Communism and Socialism brought forth cheers or protests.

President Bombacci opened the congress by recalling history of th Socialist party in fighting against prejudices and in overcoming obstacles.

"Our work will remain a glorious heritage to all," he said.

He then mentioned Dr. Karl Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg, German Socialists, who were killed in Berlin in 1919 and whom he characterized as martyrs. At the mention of their names there was pandemonium. Communists cried, "Hurrah for Communism," which antagonized the Socialists and there ensued a battle of words. Some delegates stood on the benches, gesticulating and shouting until they were exhausted.

TEST OF STRENGTH.

Signor Bombacci finally was able to resume his address, which he concluded with: "Long live the voices, which come to us from the dead, from the prisons, from the exiles—in which the proletariat of all countries unite."

There was one test of strength, though no count was taken of the vote. It came on the raising of hands on a motion by Deputy Misiano, when the congress approved changing the sixth item on the calendar to the fourth item. This dealt with the reports of the Third (Moscow) Internationale, and the action the Italian party intends to take. The Communists are most insistent in adhering to the internationale.

It is anticipated there will be a vote on the question of adherence to the internationale next Monday.

SCHISM FORECAST.

Today's events seemingly forecast a schism among the Italian Socialists. A rule has been made in the congress that representatives of other nations may sit at the sessions, but that only the Communists among them may address the congress. Accordingly, this afternoon the German Communist, Paul Levy, who was a partner of the late Karl Liebknecht, made an address, but Wilhelm Dittmann, former vice-president of the German Reichstag, was not permitted to do so. Dittmann's name was received with cat calls.

"The good of a party is not always in union," Herr Levy said. "There are moments in party life when the different elements cannot go forward together. It is as Liebknecht said—when there are two parties there is no unity. We look for the German Communist party to carry the German proletariat to victory."

To this there came an outcry: "The French are stopping you."

Deputy Graziadei, in addressing the congress, said:

"Never was capital so well united internationally as it is today. We must decide between national and international Socialism. Only with a united front can we overcome the international army which will be used to crush us."

COPPER MINES CLOSE; MANY WORKMEN IDLE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DOUGLAS (Ariz.) Jan. 15.—Information received here tonight from Cananea, Sonora, Mex., disclosed that the mines of the Cananea Consolidated Copper Company had shut down and that the smelter would be closed by Monday morning. This is in keeping with the company's previously announced intention of suspending operations January 15.

It was estimated that about 2000 persons were thrown out of work. Most of the idle employees are Mexicans. The period of suspension will depend largely on developments in the copper market, it was said.

ACTRESS TELLS SECRET

Tells How To Darken Gray Hair With a Home-Made Mixture

Joicey Williams, the well-known American actress, recently made the following statement about gray hair and how to darken it, with a home made mixture:

"Anyone can prepare a simple mixture at home that will gradually darken gray, streaked or faded hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half-pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. This will make a gray-haired person look twenty years younger. It does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off."—[Advertisement.

AD WOMEN HAVE JINKS.

Entertainment Program Preceded by Installation of President.

That advertising women can play as well as work, just as successfully as the advertising men, was demonstrated at the annual jinks of the Los Angeles Women's Advertising Club last evening at the home of Mrs. Harold Stonier, 1705 Harvard Boulevard. The intellectual was blended with the frivolous in contests of wits and contests of prowess in other directions which created storms of laughter. A good old southern feast, served by an original artist in these things, the stunts and the inauguration of Miss Frances Jacklin's term of office as president to succeed Miss Helen Royce of Barker Bros., resigned, formed the introduction to the new year for the club.

BUSINESS IS BULWARK OF CIVILIZATION.

Standard Oil Chief Says It is Hard to Take on Prewar Ways After Splurge.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The world is turning to business as the real bulwark of civilization and as the one force which can start the wheels of progress going full speed again, A. C. Bedford, chairman of the board of directors of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, declared in an address today before the Brooklyn Chamber of Commerce.

"The supreme problem of the world," he said, "is how to obtain maximum efficiency in production and distribution of materials and goods of which the world is in such sore need. If we could solve this problem the wheels of industry throughout the world would hum as never before. The imminence of starvation and death would be lifted from the lives of millions of people and civilization would move forward with stability and confidence."

Mr. Bedford said that he had absolute confidence of better business conditions "now that the bubble of inflation and false prosperity is bursting."

Speaking of centralization of wealth in the United States, he asserted that "by the very momentum of forces now in motion the government and business men will be creditors to the rest of the world within a few years to the extent of $20,000,000,000."

"Business," he concluded, "is taking the attitude of some of our returned heroes. Having become accustomed to a life of excitement, it is hard to resume the dull and prosaic, if safe, ways of prewar times. However, I think we can be reassured in the soundness of American business."

AMERICAN SOCIALIST WAS HELD SECRETLY.

DELEGATES TO THIRD INTERNATIONALE INSTRUCTED NOT TO TALK WITH SCHWARTZ.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

BERLIN, Jan. 15.—G. S Zinovieff, member of the Central Committee of the Russian soviet upon whose orders M. Schwartz, an American Socialist of San Francisco and his wife were imprisoned at Moscow, issued instructions to the other delegates to the Third Internationale that they should hold no intercourse with Schwartz, Arthur Crispien, one of the four German delegates so informed Schwartz today.

Herr Crispien said that this order followed a discussion between them and Schwartz, whose opinions they had asked because he spoke Russian and had had an opportunity for investigation. Shortly afterwards Schwartz disappeared. He and his wife were thrown into prison, remaining there several months. Mrs. Schwartz went on a hunger strike and a few days after her release died.

In speaking with Mr. Schwartz today, Herr Crispien explained:

"When we missed you, we went to Zinovieff and asked what had happened. Zinovieff assured us that you had gone home. Later, we heard rumors that you were in jail and again visited Zinovieff, who said, 'Oh, he is all right; he will go out with the other American delegates.'"

The German delegates did not know that the other Americans already had left. "Had we known that you were still in prison," he said, "we would have started an agitation over all Germany for your release."

Doctor Tells How to Strengthen Eyesight 50 Per Cent in One Week's Time in Many Instances

A Free Prescription You Can Have Filled and Use at Home.

Philadelphia, Pa. Do you wear glasses? Are you a victim of eye strain or other eye weaknesses? If so, you will be glad to know that according to Dr. Lewis there is real hope for you. Many whose eyes were failing say they have had their eyes restored through the principle of this wonderful free prescription. One man says, after trying it: "I was almost blind; could not see to read at all. Now I can read everything without any glasses and my eyes do not water any more. At night they would pain dreadfully; now they feel fine all the time. It was like a miracle to me." A lady who used it says: "The atmosphere seemed hazy with or without glasses, but after using this prescription for fifteen days everything seems clear. I can even read fine print without glasses." It is believed that thousands who wear glasses can now discard them in a reasonable time and multitudes more will be able to strengthen their eyes so as to be spared the trouble and expense of ever getting glasses. Eye troubles of many descriptions may be wonderfully benefited by following the simple rules. Here is the prescription: Go to any active drug store and get a bottle of Bon-Opto tablets. Drop one Bon-Opto table in a fourth of a glass of water and allow to dissolve. With this liquid bathe the eyes two to four times daily. You should notice your eyes clear up perceptibly right from the start and inflammation will quickly disappear. If your eyes are bothering you, even a little, take steps to save them now before it is too late. Many hopelessly blind might have been saved if they had cared for their eyes in time.

NOTE: Another prominent physician to whom the above article was submitted, said: "Bon Opto is a very remarkable remedy. Its constituent ingredients are well known to eminent eye specialists and widely prescribed by them. The manufacturers guarantee it to strengthen eyesight 50 per cent in one week's time in many instances or refund the money. It can be obtained from any good druggist and is one of the very few preparations I feel should be kept on hand for regular use in almost every family." It is sold in this city by all good druggists.—[Advertisement.

AKRON GRID WARRIORS PREVAIL IN GREAT GAME.

Down Conn's All-Stars After a Terrific Scrimmage; Losers Finish With a Tremendous Rush.

BY PAUL LOWRY.

The home folks had their first swallow of professional football at Tournament Park yesterday afternoon, and found the swallowing good. Five thousand persons watched the Akron (O.) eleven beat the Conn All-Stars, 13 to 7, in a game that ran the gamut from the ordinary to the intensely spectacular.

Entering the last period on the short end of a 13-to-0 score, the All-Stars carried the ball almost the length of the field on three successive forward passes, Hamilton catching the last one just over the Akron goal line. "Rabbit" Mallette, the former U.S.C. star, who had heaved the pill to Hamilton, added the seventh point for the Conn Stars when he toed the ball between the uprights.

CAME IN FIRST.

The outstanding play of the game came in the first quarter a few minutes after the start of the contest. It was a forward pass shot from the huge paw of "Rip" King, the Akron fullback, and which was gathered in by "Scotty" Bierce, the speedy right end, fifty-five yards from the point from where it was thrown. This resulted in Akron's first touchdown.

The play was very similar to "Brick" Muller's successful heave to Stephens in the California-Ohio State game, which also resulted in a touchdown. Pollard took the ball from center. After running a few steps toward the end he turned and tossed the leather to King, who then shot it down the field to Bierce.

LONGER PASS.

The only difference between the Akron and California execution of the play was that King's pass was some five yards longer and Bierce was waiting on the goal line for the ball. Stephens, on the other hand, caught Muller's pass while running at top speed.

The second Akron touchdown was almost as brilliantly executed as the first. From the 25-yard line on one side of the field King dispatched a pass to the extreme end of the goal line on the other side of the field. Pollard, dashing along at express-train speed, falconed into the air and crashed to the ground with Hamilton on his neck. Copley, captain of the Akron team, after missing goal from the first touchdown, kicked his second trial.

HAD THE BULGE.

Akron had the bulge throughout the first half, a powerful line opening up holes large enough to drive a tractor through. But the longer they played the better the All-Stars got. In the second period their line was stopping the Akron backs in their tracks.

In big "Swede" Rundquist, former Illinois tackle, the All-Stars possessed one of the brightest luminaries of the day. "Swede" was in every play. He dragged Pollard, the elusive darky, who was an All-American player from Brown a few years back, to the ground with much gusto on numerous off-tackle smashes. Going down the field under punts Rundquist was invariably the first man on the job.

A FEW YARDS.

Pollard rarely had a chance to get more than a few yards up the turf. "Tiny" Thornhill, at the other tackle, was a thorn in the Akron team's side. Had the rest of the line played proportionately as well, which would have been only fair, it might have been harder picking for Akron. McConnaughy, at center, was a strong link, but the guards left much to be desired.

Tuffy Conn tried his darndest to get started on one of his famous runs, but his interference wasn't up to snuff, and Tuffy had to run fifty yards across the field to gain six or seven.

Conn reeled off thirty yards, his longest dash of the day, in the final period. This started the parade for the Akron goal that wound up in a touchdown.

SHORT FORWARD.

The play started with Mallette hurling a short forward pass to Conn. The latter scooted, zigzagged and criss-crossed his way down the field for thirty yards before he was finally enveloped under a pile of Blue and Gold jerseys. Kramer shot the next pass to Mallette, also a short one. The Rabbit was off like a bullet, spun around the end and away from everyone but Pollard, playing safety man for Akron. He fooled everyone but the colored boy with his clever sidestepping. This thirty-yard run placed the ball on the Akron 20-yard line.

It was then that Mister Hamilton, who had been having a rather shaky career in the game, got his chance to become notorious. He caught Mallette's pass with much eclat just as it cleared the goal line, and in a way made up for his rather ineffectual efforts to knock off the interference on runs around his flank.

HE-MAN'S GAME.

Shortly after the game ended, with everyone firmly convinced, those who came to scoff and those who came to cheer, that professional football is a regular he-man's game and no place for the ping-pong experts.

The Akron team is a polished aggregation of players, capable of playing a driving, slashing game or unfurling an aerial attack that is seldom equaled. Conn's team showed the lack of practice. The material is good. Akron has two of the best ends ever seen here in Nesser and Bierce. The latter is terribly fast. Nesser's strong forte is in fighting off the interference, staying on his feet and getting the man with the ball. The line-up:

Akron.		Conns.
Nesser	L.E.R.	Hamilton
Johnson	L.T.R.	Thornhill
Tomlin	L.G.R.	Capron
L. Tobin	C.	McConnaughy
Rendall	R.G.L.	Beale
Copley	R.T.L.	Rundquist
Bierce	R.E.L.	Baujan
Harris	Q.B.	Conn
H. Garrett	L.H.B.	Mallette
Pollard	R.H.B.	Kibler
King	F.B.	Kramer

Score by periods:

Akron	6	0	7	0	—13
Conns	0	0	0	7	—7

Touchdowns—Bierce and Pollard of Akron; Hamilton of Conn All-Stars. Goals from touchdowns—Copley and Mallette.

Substitutions—All-Stars, Card for Mallette, Kirkpatrick for Kibler, Lawrence for Rundquist, who relieved Kibler.

Officials—Ralp Jesson, referee; Glenn Whittle, umpire; Ritchie, head linesman.

GOLF DOINGS.

Dr. Paul Hunter and E. S. (Scotty) Armstrong are determined to put the skids under the golf professionals. Last Sunday they tried to vanquish Leo Diegel and Eddie Loos on the Pasadena Golf Club course without much success, losing 6 and 5.

This afternoon on the Midwick Country Club course Hunter and Armstrong have selected Diegel, the Pasadena club pro, and Chick Frasier, the Midwick pro, as their meat. The match, which is a best-ball affair, is scheduled to start at 1 o'clock. It should attract fully as large a gallery as the record one that followed the Hunter-Armstrong and Diegel-Loos match last Sunday at Pasadena.

Mrs. Dunn-Webb's phenomenal putting won the match at the Pasadena club last Sunday. Playing for two points a hole, best ball and aggregate, Mrs. Dunn-Webb and Clarkson were victorious by 4 points and 2 to play.

YACHTING AUTHORITY TO VISIT CALIFORNIA.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SEATTLE, Jan. 15.—Daniel L. Pratt, Seattle yachting authority, will leave tomorrow for California, where he will confer with representatives of practically all yacht clubs on the Coast with a view to effecting a thorough reorganization of yachting associations of the Pacific. He will meet California yachtsmen and powerboat owners at San Francisco for a conference looking to the reorganization of the old Power Boat Association.

It is his plan to seek co-ordination of the activities of all yachting associations on the Coast from Puget Sound to San Diego, to revive interclub regattas and secure entries from the south in the class-R races of the International Yachting Association, in which the Yacht Club and the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club of Vancouver, B. C., have competed.

MRS. DUNN WEBB MAKES GOLF MARK.

At the Pasadena Golf Club yesterday Mrs. Dunn Webb made a new Coast record for women players by turning in a score of 80 around a 6300 yards, eighteen holes course. Her opponent was Ernest Alexander of the Lincoln Motor Company. Mrs. Webb missed a putt on the last hole, or otherwise she would have had a 79 score.

SCORES LANDIS'S ACTION.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—A petition protesting against the employment of Judge Kenesaw M. Landis as national baseball commissioner has been prepared by Thomas J. Sutherland, a Chicago lawyer, and sent to members of Congress from Illinois, it was learned today.

In a letter to Chicago newspapers, Mr. Sutherland is said to have urged that they "comprehend the importance of this petition, as well as to the immediate necessity of this attempt to mulct the government, and also to set an example of vicious infidelity to public service."

The petition demands action relative to Judge Landis serving both as a judge and an agent of the baseball commission.

Judge Landis said:

"I looked into things well before accepting this baseball work. I feel that I did right in accepting the place offered to me."

MULLER'S STUNT IS SURPASSED.

King's Forward Pass to Bierce O'ertops Brick's.

Phenomenal Play Features Akron's Grid Victory.

Defensive Strategy Seems to be Proper Caper.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

The almost unlimited possibilities of the forward pass were demonstrated for the second time at Tournament Park this season when, early in the game, King of the Akron champions spiraled the oval fifty-five yards to his team-mate Bierce for the first touchdown.

This bettered by three yards the pass with which "Brick" Muller of the California team established a new record against Ohio on New Year's, but Muller's mark still stands in the amateur ranks.

The play was almost identical with that which brought 45,000 people to their feet on New Year's. The teams were practically in the same position, and the pass was made over the same goal line, but to the right instead of to the left of the goal posts.

TOSSED TO KING.

L. Tobin, the Cyclopean Akron center, snapped to Fritz Pollard, who tossed the ball to King. The latter ran back a few steps, just as did Muller, and then whirling, shot the ball fifty-five yards to Bierce, who brought it down just as he himself was tackled and brought down a yard or so over the line.

It was an approximately thirty-yard heave by King to the sprinting Pollard which gave Akron its second touchdown, while the sudden unfurling of an aerial attack yielded the only score chalked by Conn's All-Stars.

Conn and Mallette, on the receiving end of two short passes, dodged and sprinted for an aggregate of sixty yards on two plays. Mallette then made a sizable heave of about thirty yards, and Hamilton, high-heeling into the air, pocketed the pigskin on the scoring side of the line.

WAS IMPOSSIBLE.

The point is that it was impossible for either team to score by ground work, showing the extent to which a defense has been built up against every form of attack except the aerial in modern football, and particularly in the professional ranks.

Defensive strategy seems to have gone ahead of the offensive, although in the amateur ranks the attack of the western colleges still remains one of their outstanding features, and is stronger than the general average of attack developed in the East and Middle West.

POTENT PLAY.

After a decade of temporizing with the forward pass, during which time its existence was repeatedly threatened, the play has become one of the most potent arms of an attacking force. Two completed passes, one of fifty-two and the other of fifty-five yards before the new year is a month old, indicates that this year of our Lord, 1921, is witnessing the play's greatest development, although not possibly the limit of its development.

The development of this play will be limited only by the limit which nature puts on strong arms, fleet runners, skill and accuracy. Conceivably, we may yet see the day of the completed sixty or sixty-five-yard pass. This would be possible with perfectly co-ordinated play, and who can say that some Hercules shall not rise up to hurl the oval seventy yards with a wing-footed mercury down to receive it?

SURPRISE PLAY.

Formerly regarded purely as a surprise play, and still so regarded by some of the eastern coaches, the forward pass is becoming quite largely accepted as much a part of attack as the end run and the off tackle buck, or any other orthodox play of the gridiron. And yet it never will be divested of the surprise element, because of the unknown direction of the pass, or the formation from which it will be projected. It is true that it cannot as yet be operated with anything like uniform success, and it is equally impossible to formulate a perfect defense against it.

Players with the arm strength to wing the ball over long distances of tanbark terrain are not a late phenomenon. Several years ago Whittier State School had a big-bicepted colored athlete named Brashear who could pass any distance up to eighty yards and pass with the accuracy of a major-league outfielder aiming at a catcher's glove, but he was used chiefly for exhibition purposes before games and between halves.

TRIPLE PASS.

Other players with similar ability found their passing talents of negligible value because it seemed impossible to get a receiver down under anything like a 50-yard throw. The triple pass and receivers chosen solely for their speed have solved this, and the result has left veteran football men dazed, immediate admiration mixed with doubt for the future—wondering if the long-distance pass will reach a point where it will threaten the very fundamentals of the game.

Such it may not bring to college football, for four years are not sufficient for football perfection such as was seen yesterday.

Just as a man in any line knows more than a boy, so a man in football (meaning a professional) knows and plays more football than a college boy. There is just about the same line of difference as exists between the college baseball player and the professional.

WHITE SWINGS A PHYSICIAN'S ALIBI.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—In connection with the fight last night at Kenosha, Wis., between Charley White and Sailor Friedman, which was stopped in the tenth round on the ground that White was stalling, Dr. J. B. Bradwell today issued a statement declaring that he had advised White not to enter the ring because of an injured hand and that he "was surprised that White was able to fight as well as he did."

LEONARD LAUDS MITCHELL.

Says Richie is "Classiest Ever;" Knock-Down Makes Champ Boxer Think.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—While the chorus of "I told you so" is going strong, Benny Leonard contented himself today with an interview, calling Richie Mitchell the "classiest lightweight I have ever met," and the pickpockets who mingled with the fashionable folk are saying "Pretty soft."

Leonard's explanation of the fight last night by which he retains the title of champion reads:

"But that knockdown in the first round preached a real sermon to me. I realized that even though I was world's champion I was not immune to a knockout. I couldn't afford to become careless, particularly with such an opponent as Richie Mitchell facing me. From then on I attended strictly to my knitting.

HELPS RICHIE.

"The knockdown also helped Mitchell considerably. His nervousness disappeared and from then to the finish it was a case of a bout being fought on its merits. I feel better now knowing that I beat the real Richie Mitchell instead of one whose work was affected by that 'psychological factor.'"

As for the Mitchell crowd it cannot be said truthfully that they are good losers. Orders were left at Richie's dressing-room door to permit no one to enter. Not even newspaper men were given permission to interview the lad, who handed Benny Leonard the toughest opposition encountered by Benny since he ascended the lightweight throne.

Leonard had no marks to show he had been through one of the hardest battles of his career. On the other hand Richie Mitchell had a badly closed right eye, his nose bridge was battered up from hard socks and his body was red. When Richie had recovered after Referee Johnny Haukop had hung up the champion's hand as a winner he hugged Leonard and called him the greatest fighter.

SOME GATE.

It will be several days before the exact amount of the receipts is known. The gate takings were estimated at close to $150,000, and it is expected that with the premiums paid for tickets about $75,000 net profits will be turned into the fund for devastated France.

Leonard received a guarantee of $40,000 and Mitchell a guarantee of $20,000. About the pickpockets—now with society taking up prizefighting as a refined attraction Madison Square Garden will become a popular rendezvous for the leather-lifters, it was said today. Without exception no congregation of individuals is so susceptible of being frisked with ease and dispatch as are the spectators of a prizefight. Their whole attention is centered upon the two men in the ring to the complete effacement of everything else.

TERMS SHOCK RICKARD.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—It now develops that Tex Rickard has been negotiating with Johnny Wilson with the hope of matching the "champeen" middleweight with Mike O'Dowd. Wilson allowed he would engage O'Dowd providing Tex would guarantee him $60,000 or would Mr. Rickard be willing to grant him 60 per cent of the gate receipts? When Tex recovered from the shock the negotiations were stopped instanter.

In making his modest request to Rickard it must be remembered that Wilson was considerate enough to agree to pay O'Dowd out of the $60,000 and that he would give Mike what he considered was a reasonable amount.

When the news was conveyed to Michael he blushed out loud and spoke in high terms of his conqueror.

"That is all right for me," he said "I'll take $30,000 for my end."

GOLF BODY TAKES ACTION.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—The Western Golf Association tonight decided to defer for one year, or until the next special meeting, action on the proposal to change the name to the American Golf Association, and to adopt a new constitution.

This action was taken on the motion of Vice-President A. R. Gates, who explained that at conferences with directors of the United States Golf Association the latter body promised to grant concessions to avoid a contention over the control of golf.

The representatives of the W.G.A. clubs were told that, the U.S.G.A. having passed into the hands of younger men, had asserted its willingness to do anything reasonable to make the game more democratic and to satisfy demands of western clubs.

Officers and directors were re-elected.

The amateur championship tournament was awarded to the Westmoreland Club of Chicago and the dates set were July 18-23. The course and dates for the western open and the junior championship will be selected later by the directors.

Advisory Council Places Big Sum in Landis' Hands.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—The new advisory council of organized baseball today wound up its first meeting by drafting rules which will govern relations between the major and minor leagues and by placing $10,000 at the disposal of Judge Landis, baseball commissioner, to be used as he sees fit in investigations. The fund will be supplied entirely by the major leagues.

The tentative drafting of the regulations provides that all leagues not going into the draft, which was restored, must notify the advisory council not later than February 15. The regulations provide that the draft should not be compulsory, but that leagues remaining out cannot draft from leagues which come in.

Within two weeks the advisory council expects to be completely organized with a secretary and treasurer, and then will begin to function officially. Headquarters will be here.

POMONA IS BEST IN CROSS-COUNTRY RUN.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

POMONA, Jan. 15.—Pomona College this afternoon won the intercollegiate cross-country championship in the fastest race ever run at Claremont. The time was 16m. 52s. for the three and one-half mile course. The scores were as follows:

Pomona, 30; Occidental, 55; Redlands, 64; Whittier, 99.

Raymond Moreman of Pomona finished first about 100 yards ahead of Sloan of Occidental. Curtis of Pomona was third; Crowe of Redlands, fourth, and Martin of Occidental, sixth. Fifth place went to a California Tech runner, but the points did not count as he was the only entry from that institution and a team of at least five was required.

JOE STECHER TO BE UNDER DOCTOR'S CARE.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

OMAHA (Neb.) Jan. 15.—Joe Stecher, former heavyweight wrestling champion, who has been ill here for some time, left Omaha for his home in Dodge, Neb., but will return next week to receive further treatments for relief from paralysis of the right arm and shoulder, his physician said.

The paralysis was the result of an injury received four years ago in Chicago, during a match with a wrestler named Cutler, Dr. Edwards said. Stecher suffered a slight disalignment of a vertebrae, which has been the cause of his illness, he said. An adjustment of the vertebrae has been made, he stated.

Dr. Edwards added that Stecher's recent match with Ed (Strangler) Lewis "might have aggravated" the condition, which caused the paralysis.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The National Boxing Association of the United States, organized to engage in professional boxing, tonight extended another invitation to New York State Boxing Commission to join the national body.

N. H. Liginger, president of the association, announced that a clause in the constitution to which Chairman Johnson of the commission objected on the ground that it would subordinate the power of the State body, has been modified.

YES, SIR! THE "BIG THREE" ARE SURE WONDERS, BELONG IN A CLASS TO THEMSELVES.

BY WARDE FOWLER.

The spectacle of three large eastern institutions of learning dashing into their holes with loud reports and yanking the holes in after 'em was furnished yesterday by Harvard, Princeton and Yale. Seldom have athletic followers had an opportunity to witness such a rare example of crawling as was furnished by the Big Three.

TO INVADE EAST.

Andy Smith dashed around and obtained permission for the California football team to invade the East next year and determine once and for all whether this long-distance travel alibi amounted to much. A telegram was sent to each of the three big eastern schools asking for a game on October 22. The first favorable reply received was to be accepted.

Apparently the arrival of these telegrams at Harvard, Princeton and Yale created a panic. The noise of athletic managers rushing around looking for some excuse not to meet the football team that humbled Ohio State on New Year's could be heard almost on the Pacific Coast.

OH, BOY!

Soon the answers began to drift in to Berkeley. The first was from Harvard and to the effect that the Crimson would certainly like to meet California, but, good gracious, they already had a game scheduled with Penn State. Princeton then said that, mercy, she'd like to try it, but there was a game on deck with Chicago that she couldn't possibly get out of. Yale crawled last, saying that the game sounded O.K., but she just couldn't see how she could arrange it, by jove.

All three answers could probably have been worded somewhat as follows and not miss the truth by an awful lot:

"We'd like to tackle California, but it looks like a cinch we'd be licked on our home grounds, and that doesn't sound so good."

White Sox Hand Out a Trimming to Ray Keating.

The L. A. White Sox (colored) club finally succeeded in downing Pitcher Ray Keating, who was on the mound yesterday for Joe Pirrone's All-Stars. Ray was hardly at his best, but even at that made the cocky Sox extend themselves to the limit to win. Red Oldham featured with the stick, swatting the pill for a homer.

Left Fielder McNair of the Sox was a thorn in the side of the All-Stars. He made several phenomenal catches, cutting off what looked to be sure triples. The two teams will meet again this afternoon at the Sox's Park, Fourth and East Anderson streets, and a banner crowd is expected to be present. Oldham will heave for the All-Stars and Curry for the Sox. Game will begin at 2:30 o'clock. The score:

Lincoln Giants Win Out in the Final Inning.

Bobby Fisher is sure having tough luck with his All-Stars against that formidable baseball nine, the Lincoln Giants, for the All-Stars were again walloped yesterday afternoon at Carroll Park. Nothing but a belated ninth-inning rally put Bobby's lads on the fritz.

Slim Love, heaving for Fisher, had the Giants nailed to the wall, 1 to 0, but the colored men pulled themselves together in the last of the ninth, and on the strength of three hits put over the winning run. Centerfielder Thomas of the Giants was a regular Tris Speaker. He nailed five slashing hits to his territory, any one of which, had it gotten by him, would have about clinched the game.

The same two teams play again this afternoon. Houck will be on the mound for the All-Stars and Jesse Hubbard, the world's greatest colored twirler, will officiate for the Giants. Play begins at 2:30 o'clock.

Manager W. M. Carroll of the Giants is out with a sweeping defi to the Los Angeles White Sox. Carroll will make a present of $250 to either Manager Anderson of the Sox, Joe Pirrone or Manager Carr if they will induce the Sox to enter into a three, five or seven-game series with the Giants. Carroll means business and will leave this challenge open until next Tuesday. It is now up to the White Sox. The score:

VISALIA TO HAVE BASEBALL THIS YEAR.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VISALIA, Jan. 15.—Visalia must have a baseball club in the field for 1921, but must operate on a sounder business basis, seemed to be the determination of a mass meeting of local fans gathered for organization.

R. K. Morey and R. F. Cross will head the financing committee, while Chris Mahoney, who brought the Pirates to a valley championship last season, will again act as manager deciding upon players, salaries, etc.

A guarantee subscription plan will be put into operation by the committee. Last year's championship team cost Visalians about $26,000, which was declared to be too high. A monthly guarantee of $1000 is expected for the season.

MRS. GREGORY ELUDES CHASE.

Dodges Curious by Taking a New Route to City.

Peete Bares Strange Life of Self and Mrs. Peete.

Etta Cole Denton Denies Slain Man Divorced Her.

Mrs. Ida L. Gregory and her daughter, Miss Maude Gregory, one-time friends of Mrs. Lofie L. Peete, and occupants with her of the Denton murder mansion, at 675 South Catalina street, dodged newspaper reporters yesterday by the simple device of taking another route from Denver than the one announced. Instead of arriving here yesterday they are understood to have gone by way of San Francisco and will probably reach this city today or tomorrow.

The change in the plans of the Gregorys, it was learned by The Times, are entirely in accord with the wishes of the District Attorney's office. In the absence of Dist.-Atty Woolwine, who is out of the city in connection with the Denton case, Dep. Dist.-Atty Raymond I. Turney refused to discuss the matter other than to say that the whereabouts of the witnesses are known to him and that he is not worried.

"Mrs. and Miss Gregory have come to California as State's witnesses, and will be at the trial when they are needed," Mr. Turney said. He smiled when told of the efforts of a crew of reporters and photographers to intercept Mrs. Gregory and her daughter at Barstow. Both witnesses have expressed their willingness to testify for the State and are co-operating with the District Attorney in every way, in spite of their past connection with Mrs Peete. Acting Public Defender Aggeler plans to use them as his witnesses, also, but may bring out what he wants by cross-examination.

Mrs. Gregory is an official of the Denver Juvenile Court, under Judge Lindsey. She and her daughter lived in the Denton house during the month of June last year, arriving there, according to the prosecution's theory of the crime, the day Denton's body was placed into the basement crypt.

PEETE AND MRS. PEETE.

With the entry of Mrs. Gregory and her daughter into prominence again in the Denton case the remarkable relations of Mrs. Peete and her husband, Richard C. Peete, are brought forcibly into the limelight. It was at the Gregory home that the Peete family rented their apartment for many months during their Denver life.

Although few women could have a truer and more loyal champion than Mrs. Peete has in her husband, it is also true that few couples have successfully weathered more serious breaches in relations than Mr. and Mrs. Peete. Their married life is in many ways unique.

From Mr. Pete's conversations, from independent investigations and from Denver friends of the Peete family The Times has learned many interesting chapters of the relations that have existed throughout the six years of Mrs. Peete's second married life.

Among these episodes are the surprise wedding of Mrs. H. R. Bosley and Richard C. Peete in Denver, Feb. 16, 1915; their temporary separation early in 1917 when their daughter Betty was less than a year old; their reconciliation and later another separation when Mr. Peete went to China on what was to have been a two-year business trip; his return sick and then Mrs. Peete's illness which drew them together again and their renting again their old apartment in the Gregory home; their third separation when Mrs. Peete came to California in May of last year and Mr. Peete's subsequent action for divorce, climaxed in September by his withdrawing his action and rushing to her aid when the murder investigation started.

Four years ago this month while Mrs. Peete was in San Diego and Mr. Peete was in Denver and Betty was being cared for by friends there, their relations reached almost the snapping point and Mr. Peete sent this telegram to his wife at the U. S. Grant Hotel on Jan. 29, 1917:

"Action made necessary by your further discrepancies in matter of accounts with Denver Salisch Hoyle Davies, etc., which forces me to the end of my patience and confidence, deeply regretted and deplored by me. Mailed your regular allowance today. Will continue same amount only weekly. Have physician mail me itemized bill.

[Signed] "R. C. PEETE."

The above is a characteristic sample of the many fundamental differences between Mr. Peete and his wife, of their frequent clashes of mentalities, their separations and their plans at different times for divorce.

"NO SKELETONS."

"Our past has been gone into so thoroughly," Mr. Peete said in discussing his life with Lofie Louise Peete to a Times reporter, "that we have no secrets from the public. There are no skeletons in our closet. Our whole lives have been thrown open for inspection."

Thus Mr. Peete speaks after almost four months of a trying ordeal which he willingly shouldered after abandoning his divorce proceedings in Denver when the Denton murder was discovered and rushing to the aid of his wife. During that period many disclosures of what purports to be the past life of Mrs. Peete have been made.

Without flinching Mr Peete has met with confidence every new phase of her life as it has been disclosed. Affidavits, public records, police correspondence and statements of witnesses have combined to bring to light many hidden chapters in Mrs. Peete's career which have been checked in many cities.

These disclosures have followed one another rapidly and include references to other men, to a wealthy suitor who offered to settle $25,000 on Betty Peete, to disagreeable incidents during Mrs. Peete's former marriage, to unpleasant episodes in Boston and Dallas and other cities where Mrs. Peete was involved in police cases.

Despite these and other incidents, Mr. Peete reiterates his confidence in his wife and declares, "She may have been foolish, but she is as innocent of murder as my baby. I know much of the things Mrs. Peete does, which, to a sober-minded man, would seem foolish and it was in fact this very difference in our way of thinking which led us so near to divorce."

AS TO BUTLER.

"Take, for instance, the recently announced existence of a wealthy suitor," said Mr. Peete. "I know about that circumstance and when you have the explanation it is all very simple. Prior to my leaving the United States for Singapore, China, in 1918, we realized we were not agreeable life-mates and like a sensible couple should, in my belief, we faced the facts as they were. Mrs Peete thus felt perfectly free to choose men friends and suitors, too, you might say.

"In Fort Worth, Tex., at a hotel she met this man, Butler. He is a high employee of a large bonding company and it was through Betty, I believe, that Mrs. Peete met him. She returned soon to Denver and stayed at the Argonaut Hotel, where I had made my home for years. Mr Butler also happened to go to Denver and their acquaintance was renewed. It is true that he did make the offer to settle $25,000 on Betty, but that was an honorable proposition made by a man, whose motives cannot be questioned. After I returned from China, I read several letters to my wife from this man and all of them were above reproach. They were nothing more than courting letters, which any honorable man might write to a woman he loved."

THEIR LOVE AFFAIR.

Mr. Peete's love for Mrs. Bosley, who formerly was Lofie Lee Preslar, daughter of T. J. Preslar, a printer in Mason, Tex., was awakened late in 1914 while Mrs. Bosley, who then called herself by her maden name, was in the St. Joseph's Hospital in Denver recovering from an automobile accident. Mrs. Bosley told Mr Peete at this time, according to his statements to friends, that she had wealthy relatives in Texas and that she was to spare no expense while there. Mr. Peete later told his friends that he paid the bills, after he married Mrs. Peete.

Soon after Betty's birth, the Peete family had disagreements and at Mr. Peete's suggestion, he declares, Mrs. Peete went to San Diego.

"We had a very serious disagreement at this time by letter," Mr. Peete says. "And I asked Mrs. Gregory to make Betty a ward of the Juvenile Court. I planned divorce proceedings then because of our mental differences. Mrs. Ethel Brown took care of Betty for a while and later I got a nurse to care for her in my own home. Mrs. Peete came back, however, after we had readjusted our difficulties."

Mr. Peete then told of their separation when he went to China and said their reconciliation was due largely to the splendid care which Mrs. Peete gave him when he returned sick. She later became ill and they set up another household.

THE "OTHER MEN."

Although Mrs. Peete's name has been linked with those of many other men during her career, Mr. Peete expresses his entire confidence that her relations have been misinterpreted and that at the worst she "may have been darn foolish as we look back upon these incidents, but nowhere has there been any criminal intent."

His mental struggles since joining her in her defense in the murder investigation have formed one of the most interesting angles of the many-cornered case.

"I tried to come here with an open mind," Mr. Peete explained. "At that time I was seeking a divorce and if the investigation showed a way in which I could gain one without action on my part I was willing to abide by the turn of events. However, as I listened to both sides of the case and weighed the evidence in the light of my past experience with Mrs. Peete and my knowledge of the workings of her mind as I knew them, I have become absolutely convinced that she is innocent of murder.

"She is a woman who could easily have been the unwitting tool of designing persons, I believe, as I look back at the past. I believe firmly that she cashed the Denton case checks in good faith for Denton himself or some one who was masquerading as Denton. I am confident that this mysterious case which may require mysterious explanations will be worked out to show Mrs. Peete is innocent. If I believed for one minute that she is guilty I would as gladly aid the prosecution as I would stand by her."

DENIES DIVORCE.

Denying that Jacob C. Denton obtained a divorce from her, as is set forth in records in Nogales, Ariz., by introducing letters declared to have been written by her and in which the writer admitted bigamy, Etta Cole yesterday denied any knowledge of the bigamy allegations and declared to the Pittsburg correspondent of The Times that she will fight for a share in the estate "to the bitter end."

She offered no explanation of the letters which Denton introduced in his divorce action April 6, 1908, and which he testified were written by her. These letters disclosed that the writer had married Egbert William Mishaw in Alameda county, California, June 13, 1906, and Denton was begged in them not to reveal his wife's asserted bigamous marriage.

"I will not say a word against Mr. Denton," she said. "He is the father of my two children and although I have expected that enemies of mine in California might try to block my case I will fight it through to the bitter end.

"I positively did not marry any man by the name of Mishaw or any other name than Denton," she dedeclared. "Although I am anxious to see justice done in regard to his murder, I do not intend to go to Los Angeles during the trial."

"The Nogales records show conclusively that Mr. Denton divorced Etta Cole Denton," said Attorney Rush M. Blodget, counsel for the estate, last night. "In addition to the three long letters introduced in the case, a post card from 'Etta' in Tucson on the same date as one of the letters was found among Denton's belongings today and it corroborates the records entirely."

ITCHING ECZEMA DRIED RIGHT UP WITH SULPHUR

Any breaking out of the skin, even fiery, itching eczema, can be quickly overcome by applying a little Mentho-Sulphur, says a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, this sulphur preparation instantly brings ease from skin irritation, soothes and heals the eczema right up and leaves the skin clear and smooth.

It seldom fails to relieve the torment and disfigurement. Sufferers from skin trouble should get a little jar of Mentho-Sulphur from any good druggist and use it like a cold cream.—[Advertisement.

WORK BUNKO ON JOBLESS.

Fleecing workingmen who are temporarily out of work and willing to take a chance in order to get a job is the latest bunko game being worked in Los Angeles, according to information given out yesterday by Malcolm McLaren, special investigator for the District Attorney, who is in charge of bunko investigations.

Such men have been swindled out of from $10 to $500 each, reaching a total of several thousand dollars, according to Mr. McLaren. The scheme came to light, it was stated, upon the arrest of Robert Lynch, alias Price, alias Pierce, and Charles Hornbuckle, arrested under the name of C. Lee, alias C. Halle.

The pair were arrested after an asserted attempt to victimize James E. Oren, a carpenter, by getting him to cash a check for $995.

The method said to be used is that a steerer, in this instance said to be Lynch, goes among men out of employment and intimates he knows of a good job. The victim is introduced to the leader, said to be Hornbuckle, or Lee, who hires him on the spot, but springs the need of immediate cash, and gets his employee to advance money on a bogus check.

Four witnesses will testify against the two men, said Mr. McLaren.

WOULDN'T MOVE AWAY.

Wife Says Husband Insisted Upon Being Near Other Woman.

John E. Grant told his wife, Anita M. Grant, she testified in divorce proceedings before Judge Walton J. Wood yesterday, that he cared for some one else. Mrs. Grant offered to sacrifice their home in this city and live in some other city so that he might forget the other woman. She said he refused and then they separated. Subsequently Mr. Grant wrote his wife a letter stating that he wanted to be her best friend. The decree was given to Mrs. Grant. Under an alimony agreement Mr. Grant will pay his wife $100 a month for the support of herself and children.

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed with Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell.

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray, streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good, even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." It is very popular, because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time, by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft luster and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.—[Arvertisement.

WIFE THREATENED TO BRAIN HIM, HE SAYS.

DANCING TEACHER SUES FOR DIVORCE ON GROUND OF EXTREME CRUELTY.

Charging his wife, Mrs. Marguerite Horn, with having "threatened to brain him and his employees with a telephone," thus causing him great mental anguish, Carl F. Horn, proprietor of a school for dancing at 755 South Spring street, yesterday filed suit for divorce through his attorney, W. I. Gilbert.

The specific charge made by Mr. Horn is extreme cruelty, shown in a series of assaults, which, he says, were made upon him by his wife in the presence of others. At one time, the complaint states, Mrs. Horn "sat upon the lap of a strange physician," thus causing the plaintiff great mental anguish and suffering. At another time, the complaint charges, Mrs. Horn scratched and bit the plaintiff's face until it bled, and told the plaintiff that if he did not furnish her with an automobile she would find a man who would give her one.

The Horns were married Aug. 28, 1917, and separated Dec. 26, 1920.

Last night Mrs. Horn declared she was not aware that a divorce suit had been filed against her.

"I know absolutely nothing about it," she asserted. "I returned only two weeks ago from a hospital, where I underwent a severe operation, and my husband has said nothing of a divorce action to me. He took me to the hospital and brought me home again and always acted very nicely. It is a complete surprise to me; I have never expected such a thing to happen."

NOT AFTER VENGEANCE.

Wife Wanted Divorce Evidence, But Not Arrest of Husband.

"I told him all I desired was evidence for a divorce and did not desire to have him arrested. My husband and the other woman both abused me," stated Mrs. Florence Bassett in Judge Walton J. Wood's court yesterday where she was granted a divorce from Roy E. Bassett.

Mrs. Bassett said she became suspicious that there was another woman in the case. She employed detectives and trailed Mr. Bassett to an apartment-house. There he was surprised in a room, she said. He had a sheet wrapped around him and the woman, wearing a kimona, was found hidden behind a screen, she said.

OIL BOOM IN IMPERIAL VALLEY.

Exact Facts About the Remarkable Developments That Mean Either One of the World's Biggest Fields or a Bitter Disappointment to Thousands.

BY CHARLES F. HAYDEN.

Here are the salient facts concerning the oil excitement in Imperial Valley:

The Brawley well northeast of Westmoreland, down 2700 feet, with gas emanations and showings of oil at three levels. Well overflowed January 6 with water and oil, bridged January 8, cemented January 11; will be opened and permitted to come in, if oil is present in sufficient quantity, February 1.

Diamond Bar well, three miles from Brawley well, down 3000 feet and capped.

Holtville well, down 1600 feet; some indication of oil in the sand and drilling resumed.

The James well, near Coyote Wells, down 1200 feet.

Other wells to be started.

Applications for government lands cover 1,300,000 acres. Maze of litigation over titles likely to occur if oil field is proved; squatters holding land on western rim of valley.

Absence of organic shale at the surface and absence of seepage support the theories of some geologists that there is no oil in paying quantities in Imperial Valley, either because it never formed there or has been burned out. Other geologists declare that the structural formation and sands struck in drilling indicate the presence of oil. These believe that if oil is found at all it will be found in an enormous quantity.

Imperial Valley is experiencing the [illegible] excitement of an incipient boom. Statements of geologists [illegible] the formation indicates the possibility that one of the greatest oil [illegible] on the globe exists there, coupled with the fact that the so-called Brawley well, fifteen miles [illegible] of Westmoreland, has [illegible] a showing of oil have raised [illegible] hopes in the minds of many of [illegible] valley residents, while others are [illegible] skeptical.

On the lonely desert rim north [illegible] Westmoreland, in the center of a [illegible] dome that overlooks rough and [illegible] desert country on all sides, [illegible] the derrick upon which chief [illegible] is focused. It is surrounded by a high wire fence with [illegible] that are kept barred, locked [illegible] guarded. Beneath the derrick [illegible] has been driven down a little [illegible] than 2700 feet.

It is a hole in the ground with [illegible] possibilities. It may mean [illegible] opening of a billion-dollar oil [illegible]. It may add another to the [illegible] list of oil disappointments. Before drilling began, it was a bleak [illegible] spot. Only the future can [illegible] whether it will become a bustling [illegible], or the grave of buried [illegible] where coyotes and jackrabbits can again range undisturbed.

[illegible] of the Imperial Oil and Development Association, owners of [illegible], believe they have struck oil [illegible] bring in a well of great productive capacity. Dr. Eric A. Starke, [illegible] and petroleum engineer, [illegible] was retained by the company [illegible] has directed the drilling [illegible], has this to say:

"I do not say that oil in commercial quantities has been found. [illegible] or not it is to be determined. [illegible] Los Angeles county or other [illegible] in California, any wild[illegible] made the same showing as [illegible] Imperial Valley, it would at [illegible] as a big well. [illegible] better structural formation. The sands are ex[illegible] quartz, well rounded [illegible]. Gas obtained [illegible] is real gas, containing [illegible], but mostly [illegible] oil has been taken from the well."

GEOLOGISTS DISAGREE.

Geologists disagree as to the probability of finding oil in Imperial Valley. Most of them seem to believe there is no oil there. Some investigators conclude that the surface formations do not indicate that oil was ever there. Others believe if oil once existed it has either been burned out [illegible] has migrated.

The formation in Imperial Valley is unlike that of proved oil fields in California. The organic shale cannot be seen, so that the source of origin of oil is not visible. So far as recent investigations show, there is no surface evidence of oil in Imperial Valley, except gas emanations. The showing of gas, however, is declared to be greater and more pronounced than in several successful and proved fields. Results of the boring by the Imperial Valley syndicate appear to disprove the theory that a great oil pool has been found as unburned limestone has been found.

The Imperial Valley Oil and Development Association was formed about two years ago with 200 members and the following officers: F. H. Beal, president; H. H. Clark, vice-president; F. H. Beal, H. H. Clark, William Coberly, Howard Shores, J. E. O'Neil and Patrick Coney, directors; E. O. Simons, attorney. The syndicate is composed of some of the most prominent men in the valley, who contributed the $100,000 or more that was necessary to make a businesslike and thorough test of the valley's oil prospects by drilling one or more wells under the direction of an oil engineer.

Drilling on the well north of Westmoreland and Calipatria was started in May, 1919. The spot selected is on a great dome, believed to be the largest of its kind in America, and with an ideal cap stratification. At a depth of 600 feet the first oil gas was encountered. At 1335 feet, according to a statement made public by President Beal, gas would burn freely on the baler.

The first showing of oil was found at a depth of 1600 feet, about six months ago. It was this showing that started the valley's first oil excitement and resulted in many companies being formed and a general rush to secure leases and government permits to drill. The syndicate announced that a stronger oil showing was encountered at 1835 feet, and that an effort would have been made to bring in the well at that time, except that the formation was not satisfactory to the engineer in charge.

GAS AND TRACES OF OIL.

At 2400 feet the well went through sixty-seven feet of conglomerate to thirty-seven feet of hard lime sand. Below this was blue clay shale underlaid by brown clay shale. At about 2650 feet sand was encountered which is described by Mr. Beal as bearing gas in quantity as well as traces of oil of high-grade gravity.

A week ago last Thursday water and oil were forced over the casing against the pressure of the water-filled well, and flowed for more than four hours. The overflow was mostly water, but the oil that spread over the drainage ditches outside the well was sufficient to create new excitement in the valley and bring hundreds of automobile parties over the long and in places difficult, road to the well. On the day following the desert surrounding the well was dotted with automobiles stranded in the deep sand.

The well was bailed out a week ago Friday, the mud brought up showing further traces of oil. At the top of the sands the well was bridged with brick and last Tuesday was cemented in. It is proposed to let the cement stand until February 1, when boring will be continued through the cement. Then, if the hopes of the syndicate are not misplaced and the oil is there, the well will be permitted to "come in."

It is an interesting feature of the oil boom in Imperial Valley that actual development has been done by concerns, syndicates or individuals with no stock to sell. The real beginning of the boom was a little more than two years ago, when the San Diego and Imperial Oil Company was formed to drill the James well. This well is within two miles of Coyote Wells and visible from El Centro—the San Diego State highway at the feet of the mountains. It was financed mostly by Seeley people, with 250,000 shares of stock at 10 cents per share.

THE PIONEER WELL.

This pioneer well was reported to have struck oil at 600 feet and rumors of a big strike caused considerable excitement. The well is now down about 1200 feet, is said to have favorable indications, but does not appear to be making rapid progress.

The Diamond Bar well, about three miles from the Brawley well, was started about the same time. This well has been financed by San Francisco men, is down 3067 feet and has been capped. It has been the subject of many optimistic rumors, but no official statement has been made and visitors have not been encouraged.

The Salton Basin Oil and Development Company has holdings six miles from the Brawley well, has drilled for water and obtained it, and has purchased a rotary rig for oil-drilling operations. The Imperial Mutual Oil Association and others have holdings under the government leasing bill.

The Holtville well is down about 1660 feet. Announcements have been made in the past few days that several other syndicates will start drilling soon.

While the people of Imperial Valley and elsewhere are waiting eagerly and hopefully for the Brawley well to come in on February 1 and drilling operations are being hurried on other locations there is not likely to be any stampede to the valley until oil has actually been developed in commercial quantities. The ground has been thoroughly combed for leases and many applications for government permits are on file. Lands out-

Chief Figures in the War of the Bing Kong and Hop Sing Tongs and How It Started Here.

The pen-and-ink sketch shows the spot on Marchessault street where one of three Hop Sing or Four Families men, following three members of the Bing Kong tong, thrust aside four intervening white men and shot down the hereditary enemies, killing two and badly wounding a third. Two of the supposed assailants were arrested and the third is a fugitive.

FEAR VULTURES OF VENGEANCE.

Los Angeles Chinese Shiver With Dread as War of Tongs Remains Unsettled and Age-Old Blood Feud Decrees That the Tally of Deaths Must be Evened Up.

BY OTIS M. WILES.

Vultures of vengeance have been hovering over Chinatown for two weeks. The feud of the tongs, centuries old, has been revived by the recent murders of two tong men. Two Chinese of an opposing tong, charged with complicity in the slaying, are to appear in court for their preliminary hearing Wednesday, but the tongman pays little heed to the white man's laws. He has a law of his own. If a tongman is slain the score must be balanced by slaying a man of the rival tong.

But the present strife is fraught with serious complications. It involves the three dominating tongs of Chinatown—the Bing Kongs, the Hop Sings and the Four Families. Two Bing Kong men are dead and until the peace meetings in San Francisco are closed, their brother tongmen are standing alone. The Bing Kong men were slain by either Four Families or Hop Sing gunmen. The exact facts are for the emissaries of peace to decide. If a decision is reached, then two tongs will array themselves for battle against the third.

WITH THEIR BOOTS ON.

Until the peacemakers have spoken, the local members of three tongs are sleeping with their boots on. The storm may break at any time. Chinatown's population is approximately 3200 Chinese. Of this number, about 175 are Bing Kong men, 120 are Hop Sings, and between 200 and 300 are members of the Four Families. The rest belong to none of these tongs.

When the storm does break, tempting prices will be placed on the heads of leaders of the rival tongs. Quong Wong is president of the local Bing Kongs. At present he is among those absent from Chinatown; Louie Pau, head of the Hop Sings, and Mark Tim Tom, leader of the Four Families tong, are also keeping away.

The tong disturbance broke suddenly upon Chinatown, when Wong Lun, Yee Fat and Wing Sen Wong were shot down by a gunman in August Alley on the night of December 30. Wong Lun and Yee Fat were killed. Wing Sen Wong is a patient at the County Hospital, recovering from bullet wounds in his hip and side. The three men were members of the Bing Kong tong and their assailants were Hop Sing or Four Families men.

CONFLICTING REASONS.

Conflicting reasons for the shooting were given by chiefs of the Bing Kong and Four Families tongs. The Hop Sings, sitting patiently in their headquarters at 520½ North Los Angeles street awaiting the decision of the peace conference in San Francisco, are chuckling to themselves. While the Bing Kongs and the Four Families are throwing mud at each other, the Hop Sings disclaim connection with the shooting of the Bing Kong men.

"Quan Oon, he do shootin'. He no Hop Sing. He Four Flamile man," they say.

Quan Oon, they state, was once a Hop Sing man but months ago failed to pay his dues and is now an outlaw member. William Chew and Chin Sing, Quan Oon's companions on the night of the shooting and now under arrest for suspicion of murder, are Hop Sing men, but the Hop Sings assert that these two Chinese did not do any shooting.

"Lillie Lem Lee makes tieuble," say the Four Families tongmen.

Lillie Lem Lee, pretty for a Chinese girl, reaped many covetous glances from the young bloods of Chinatown. Once before, in 1914, while she was a resident of San Francisco's Chinatown, two rival tongmen angling for her love precipitated a tong war there. Several Chinese were killed and one of the tongs spirited her out of San Francisco. She them came to Los Angeles.

LILLIE'S PART.

One of the Four Families' officials, through an interpreter, told of Lillie's part in the recent killings. He says she desired to embark upon a primrose life, but before doing so a Chinese girl must secure fine clothes and jewelry. It is the custom for the girl's sweetheart to provide these. A Bing Kong man furnished the clothes and jewelry and the girl was in debt to him for his kindness. Then came Lew Quan Oon, the Hop Sing man. He paid to the Bing Kong man the debt Lillie owed him and he, automatically, became Lillie's sweetheart, eliminating the Bing Kong man.

But the Bing Kong man continued to call on Lillie Lem Lee. Lillie's new sweetheart protested to his tong, but the Hop Sings warned him not to start trouble. According to the Four Families informant, Lew Quan Oon disregarded the word of the Hop Sing organization and the killing followed. The fact that Yee Fat and Wing Sen Wong were merely companions of the Bing Kong man was considered cause enough that they also should be shot.

Such is the story of the Four Families tong.

But the Bing Kongs laugh at it. They assert that a fake lottery game caused the trouble. Here is their story:

"Though Bing Kong men did not conduct the lottery game, a few Bing Kong members held stock in the lottery company. The drawing was a fraud and the manager refused to pay. The Four Families man who won the prize ticket appealed to the Chinese Chamber of Commerce. A $4000 settlement was agreed upon, to be paid by the company to the Four Families man, though the Bing Kong stockholders objected. But the Four Families man disregarded the agreement and demanded an additional $1500. This also was finally paid.

GO ON WARPATH.

"Because the Bing Kong stockholders, individuals and not representing the tong, objected to the payment, certain members of the Four Families went on the warpath. A banquet costing $500 was held

THOUSANDS WILL ATTEND AMBASSADOR'S OPENING.

With Splendor Unrivaled in West, Big Hotel Will Hold Opening Dinner Dance on Tuesday Night.

With a splendor unrivaled in the social life of the West, the opening dinner and ball of the new Ambassador Hotel will be given Tuesday evening and will be attended by nearly 2000 prominent people of California and winter visitors. Brilliant in its color and life, vibrant with its music and exquisite in its thousands of flowers that will fill the rooms, the ball promises to head the list of affairs now scrolled in the social history of the Southland.

Reservations were closed early in the week. When the affair was planned it was thought the dining-room would be ample to accommodate the guests. Because of the deluge of requests, it was decided to open the ballroom for dinner, giving the house a capacity of 1800. Reservations have been received from San Francisco, Santa Barbara Riverside, San Diego, Pasadena and other cities of the State and social lights from all sections of the West will be in attendance.

The event will be radiant in all its aspects. A special program of music has been provided and three symphony orchestras will play during dinner, and four jazz orchestras at the dance. A concert will be given in the afternoon, with a lighter program following at the tea-dansant.

BY WOMEN'S ORCHESTRA.

A 3 o'clock the Women's Symphony Orchestra will give a recital under the direction of Henry Schoenfeld. This will include a number of selections from Schubert, Schumann, Dvorak, Luigini and Jaernefelt as well as compositions by Mr. Schoenfeld. Following this the regular tea-dansant will be held in the Palm Room, relieving the afternoon by lighter strains of jazz.

In the evening at the dinner, two symphony orchestras will give programs, one in the dining-room and one in the ballroom. The Ambassador Symphony Orchestra of forty pieces, under the direction of Adolf Tandler, will play in one place and a symphony composed of Philharmonic artists, under the direction of Henry Lahann of the Ambassador at Santa Barbara, will play in the other.

This will be relieved by the intermittent blazing of Eddie Elkins and Max Fisher with their jazz fiends in combination with two other jazz orchestras. These four will amalgamate to play at the ball. Mr. Fisher's group plays at the Ambassador at the teas and suppers and Mr. Elkins's at the Alexandria. The Remick Quartet will sing.

UNUSUAL DINNER.

The dinner itself will be unusual. The affair will be a European banquet and will, it is said, be the largest ever given in Los Angeles. It will rival that tendered the President during his visit here a year ago. Service will begin at 7:30 p.m.

According to present plans the decorations will create an atmosphere of spring. Spring flowers and foliage will be in profusion. On each table will be a centerpiece of spring flowers and roses and at the place of each lady will be a corsage bouquet and for each man a carnation.

The evening will be the supreme culmination of the efforts of William F. Banks, the manager. Since the walls of the Ambassador began taking shape he has directed the project. With him at the opening will be F. L. Andrews and Harry Mull, his assistants, and Mrs. Charles Jeffras, the hostess.

PLAN MONTHLY TREAT FOR MEN.

Better America Federation to Arrange More Outings for Our Disabled Heroes.

So great was the happiness given to the 250 sick and disabled ex-service men who were treated to an outing and entertainment last week by the Elks, Rotary Club, American Legion and Better America Federation of California that the latter is now working on a plan to make this a monthly affair. It is seeking the co-operation of eleven other organizations which will take charge of the war heroes one day each month. It is felt that all who assist will be amply repaid by the pleasure of bringing sunshine into the lives of the men who were wounded while fighting for their country.

Free Lecture by Gaze.

Harry Gaze speaks Sunday afternoon at Trinity Auditorium, 3:15, "Constructive Psychology Life, Love and Wisdom." All welcome. Mr. Gaze will lecture ballroom, Hotel Alexandria, Monday, 8:15. All welcome.

THINKS DRY LAW IS LIKE LICENSE.

U. S. Comissioner Pessimist on Local Enforcement.

Prohibition for Revenue No Assurance of Income.

Bootleggers Jailed May Eat Up Money from Fines.

The passage by the City Council and the Board of Supervisors of ordinances to enforce the national prohibition law, to take effect in thirty days from the date of their passage, means that U. S. Commissioner Long will lose about 50 per cent of his business.

For the nine months covering the period from April, 1920, to the close of the year, 311 liquor cases of one kind and another were filed before the commissioner. The fees amounted to more than $4000. Under the new ordinances all of these cases will be disposed of by the police courts.

Most of the cases never get beyond an arraignment and the commitment of the defendants to the County Jail or the approval of a bond for their release from custody, but these all bring fees to the commissioner. Lately many of the arrests have been made on information, when they are taken directly to the Federal court, and the commissioner is deprived of these preliminary fees.

DIE ON THE HOOF.

After arraignment of the defendants many of the cases die of loss of pep. An investigation discloses the fact that there is hardly enough evidence to warrant the indictment of the accused, and if there should be sufficient to serve in this ex parte proceeding, that no jury would find them guilty. That means that the cases slowly perish and end with the action of the commissioner.

The lack of success of the United States Attorney in convicting persons charged with violation of the liquor laws—for it is said in court circles that requires more evidence to convict on asserted violations of the liquor laws than it does to send a man to the gallows in a murder case—has made the Federal officials slow to present a case to a jury in an open trial unless the evidence is conclusive and uncontradicted. The consequence has been that many cases never get any farther than an arraignment before the commissioner, but that official gets his fees.

Under the rule that has been in service since the adoption of Federal prohibition, the cost of prosecuting these cases on the part of the government has been very high. The same witnesses are heard three times in every case that goes to a jury—at the arraignment, before the grand jury and at the hearing in open court. The fee before the commissioner at the arraignment is $1.50 and traveling expenses, and before the grand jury and at the trial it is $3 a day and traveling expenses, so that it costs the government not less than $7.50 a day for each witness who attends all three proceedings, and this each witness must do, if the case ever gets beyond the preliminary stage before the commissioner.

THINKS IT MERCENARY.

Commissioner Long is of the opinion that the new legislation placing the enforcement of prohibition locally in the hands of the city and county authorities, will not act as a deterrent of the general movement to fly in the face of the law. He thinks that as, in his judgment, the city and county are looking at the money end of the transaction, with a view to securing as much cash as possible out of the new activities, that fines ranging from $50 to $100 will be assessed against violators of the law who have been convicted.

This will mean, he says, a virtual license of the traffic, for the bootlegger won't worry very much about the fines. He can make that much money almost any day if not interfered with.

If jail sentences are imposed, the cost of maintaining the prisoners will be more than the fines collected where fines and imprisonment are both imposed by the court, in the opinion of the commissioner.

ON MARKET OUTLOOK.

Sales Managers of "Key" Lines Will Discuss Conditions.

Promising to give members a proper perspective on the business outlook the Los Angeles division of the International Sales Managers' Association has arranged for ten speakers to talk at the banquet to be held tomorrow at 6:15 p.m. at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. The following sales managers will deliver short addresses:

BANKING INSTITUTE DINNER ON TUESDAY.

PLAZA AND ARCADE STATION SITES WILL BE TOPIC FOR DISCUSSION.

At the first forum dinner of the year for the Los Angeles chapter of the American Institute of Banking, which will be held Tuesday evening at the City Club, the main topic for discussion will be "Plaza Versus Arcade Site for a Union Station." The first allotment of 400 tickets was sold last week, and it is expected that the City Club's dining-room will be taxed to capacity.

Tuesday's dinner will be marked by the launching of a campaign to bring the 1922 national convention of the American Institute of Banking to Los Angeles. This year the convention will be held at Minneapolis from July 19 to 22.

At present the local institute chapter has nearly 1500 members out of a total of about 2300 employees of local banks. The local chapter stands fifth in point of membership in the nation, being outranked, in the order named, only by New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and San Francisco.

The Los Angeles Clearinghouse Association is backing the institute and has spent about $8000 fitting out chapter headquarters at a site at 721 South Hill street, which has been leased for five years. At this location about 700 members are attending classes in elementary banking, money and banking, political economy, bonds and investments, public speaking and Spanish.

Three defense witnesses, claimed the defendant, testified he was not going over fifteen miles an hour.

INE LIFE CONDITIONS.

conditions governing marine the Salton basin through the d which, under the geological theory, would indicate the formation of oil, are thus described by President Frank Beal of the Brawley syndicate:

"Originally we had this great long gulf extending for some 800 miles, naturally one of the best breeding grounds for marine life that could be found anywhere on the earth's crust. We have the warm, semi-tropic climate, no severe weather, maintaining an even and mild temperature in the waters of this gulf.

A visit to the present gulf below the mouth of the Colorado River will convince you that there is at this time one of the greatest marine life activities going on that there is on the face of the earth. This same condition prevailed in the ancient miocene age, when oils were being laid down. Over on the eastern shore of the gulf in early geological times the Colorado River commenced the erection of a silt barrier, extending from a point near Yuma, westerly to the Cocopah Mountains.

This great barrier was gradually raised to the surface of the waters of the gulf, creating a low delta region, and over these mud flats the tides passed to the north and kept these waters in what is now Salton Basin saline; but not being subject to the heavy tide flows and rips, and marine disturbances that existed farther down the Gulf or on the shores of the Pacific Ocean, and there was created in this inland sea one of the most ideal conditions for the production of marine life. This can well be attested to by a visit to the oyster shell beds on the west side of the valley.

These oyster beds are in many instances mountains of shells and many of these shells weigh as much as forty pounds. This fact alone is evidence that ideal conditions prevailed in the development of these giant mollusks. These shells have been classed by geologists as belonging to the miocene age, or the age that has been the big oil producer on the Pacific Slope. These oyster beds are not the only indication of fossil life, as all the older shells and formations go to show that the Salton Basin stratification belongs to the miocene and the lower pliocene periods and abounds with fossil remains.

Whisky Trials Will Move One Step Tomorrow.

The locally famous whisky prosecutions, those of the Groves brothers and Joe Goldberg, in U. S. District Judge Bledsoe's court and those against Julius Sloto and about twenty other defendants in U. S. District Judge Trippet's court, are booked for action in the local Federal court tomorrow.

In the case against Sloto and others the argument of the demurrer to the indictment charging them with conspiring to violate the national prohibition law and the Volstead Act is set for Judge Trippet's court.

In the action against F. Ray Groves, Edward Groves, Ralph Groves and Joe Goldberg, a second indictment is pending, charging that by extortion the defendants conspired to violate these Federal enactments. The first indictment against these four charged that they had conspired to violate the law and made a straight accusation without specifying the methods. A demurrer to this indictment was presented by Paul W. Schenck and Frank E. Dominguez, representing the defendants, but the government furnished no reply. Then followed the second indictment, and up to the close of business at the Federal Building yesterday, no demurrer had been presented.

None of the defendants will be asked to plead until the demurrers are disposed of. They have all been arraigned.

WRITES ACCUSATION AGAINST DEAF MUTE.

JUSTICE HAS HARD TIME TO CONFORM TO LAW; MAN MUST UNDERSTAND.

Arraigning a man, who could not hear nor speak presented a problem yesterday to Justice Hinshaw, but the task was accomplished. Alfred Simon, unable to speak or hear, appeared before him on a charge of stealing a mink fur.

The court began to inform the defendant of his rights in a justice court, but met with no response and then learned he was arraigning a deaf mute. The court, being able to handle a typewriter, wrote out all that is required by law, asked the defendant his true name, had him read the complaint and informed him of his rights in writing. Simon replied in writing.

The defendant said he wanted his hearing Monday and the justice thought of the requirement of the law that a defendant be confronted with his accusers, which will require that he understand all that is said in court. Justice Hinshaw is now pondering over this question.

In a note addressed to the court Simon said his wife is ill, that if given a chance he will be a "good man and keep out of trouble." He was asked if he could give $500 bail. As the banks were about to close, the court accepted the defendant's pass book on a savings bank as bail and instructed the bank to pay out nothing on the account, which is for more than $500.

OIL LEASE RECEIVER MAKES ACCOUNTING.

KERN COUNTY LANDS YIELDED LARGE REVENUE IN TWO-YEAR PERIOD.

Lewis F. Byington, receiver of valuable oil lands located in Kern county, which are involved in the cases of the government against the General Petroleum Company, and the St. Helena's Oil Company, and cover the holdings of the Boston Pacific Oil Company, filed his final report and accounting in the United States District Court yesterday.

The land covered by the lease of the Boston Pacific Oil Company, involved the south half of the southwest quarter of section 32, township 31, south, range 24 east, and the south half of the southeast quarter of section 32, township 31, south, range 24 east.

The report states that the yield of oil from the date of the appointment of the receiver in October, 1918, was about 14,000 barrels a month, and that it was sold to the Richfield Oil Company. In October, 1918, the oil brought $1.42 per barrel; in October, 1920, the sale price was $2.51¼.

The total amount received during the term of the receivership was $1,539,161.42. There was expended, $56,840.29, and $1,482,340.93 was turned over to the receiver.

SOUTHWARD TREK OF CANADIANS PRAISED.

TORONTO PHYSICIAN SAYS IT AIDED TO KEEP COUNTRY TRULY ANGLO-SAXON.

Canada's loss of the tens of thousands of her residents who came to the United States during the long Tory regime from 1878 to 1896 was not an unmitigated evil for the Dominion, but really helped to preserve and strengthen Canadian-American friendship and also helped to keep the United States an Anglo-Saxon nation, says an article written for the Toronto Star by Dr. John Hunter of Los Angeles.

Dr. Hunter, who formerly resided in Toronto, where he was a member of the Board of Education, reviews the years of political discontent during the long term of Tory power in the Dominion, and points out that the years of heaviest emigration from Canada to this country coincided with the years when there was an enormous immigration into the United States from Central and Southern Europe.

Canadians were more quickly assimilated into American social and business life than were other foreigners, he says, and so helped to keep this country from taking on the aspect which it might have acquired had English or Canadian immigration been altogether stopped.

In great part the present friendliness of the United States toward Canada and toward England and all parts of the British empire is due to the great number of Canadian immikrants who came south of the border late in the last century because of discontent with political conditions in the Dominion, Dr. Hunter writes. At the time, he says, this loss to Canada seemed an unmixed evil, but he thinks that the results have shown that the heavy emigration was a benefit to both countries.

PLEASING THE PEOPLE.

President Obregon is finishing up that superb $16,000,000 theater in the City of Mexico. If the people have a beautiful place to play in they will not be looking for a place to fight in. The lords of France kept revolution out of the way by amusing the people. Most folks would rather eat than fight and they seems to prefer dancing to either.

LADIES' BANKING.

So many women do their banking in their stockings that the county treasurer at Pittsburg has had a private room set off in his quarters to enable the ladies to reach their rolls without embarrassment before approaching his desk. It is rather confusing for a lady to retrieve a wad of bills from her stocking while a bunch of curious hirelings are looking on.

THE WAR PATH.

The Russian Bolshevists expect to start out 3,000,000 more men on the war path as soon as the ice melts and the frost begins to come out of the ground. It may yet be necessary to get William Jennings Bryan to whistle up that million armed patriots he said he could bring to the seashore over night. We are not willingly going to permit the Bolsheviki to overrun Europe and America as well.

SUFFER IN SILENCE.

Fifty club women had a luncheon together here the other day without a word being spoken during the hour. There are a lot of men who think it couldn't be done and there must be a catch in it somewhere. There is no use in saying a pleasant time was had by all, because there wasn't. Fifty women condemned to silence during a meal can hardly be said to be happy. They did, however, say that they had the time of their lives, and this is possibly true. To see a flock of fifty women playing dumb for an hour is the time of anybody's life.

HONESTY FORBIDS.

America will bind itself to no contract that it knows beforehand will never be carried out. There are many reasons why we should not ratify in toto the Versailles Treaty; and they are as cogent as the other many reasons for speedily joining a League of Nations.

The Versailles Treaty still contains a clause demanding the peremptory trial of the ex-Kaiser and the leading Prussian war lords. That clause the signatories to the Versailles Treaty have not the slightest intention of enforcing. Indeed, such a procedure is already outside the range of practical politics.

CHARITY AND BUSINESS.

Sometimes we are tempted to suspect that Uncle Sam's big-heartedness is taken advantage of by the sophisticated foreigner. Thus the idea that millions of Chinese are facing starvation in Northern China is a sufficiently poignant fact to loosen the purse strings of his charity.

But when we learn that the flour mills of Shanghai, only a short haul away from these starving millions, are shipping their product at large profit to the southern Orient and the European countries, our business instinct rises in rebellion.

If in China business begins at home and charity starts from abroad, Uncle Sam will have no desire to hold the sack for Shanghai.

HARMONY NOTE.

Mary Garden has been made director-general of Chicago grand opera, displacing two men and taking command of both the commercial and esthetic branches of this musical industry. The League of Nations hasn't worked wonderfully well in the Chicago company. The Italian songbirds do not mate very well with the French, English and American singers. There are a lot of jealousies and temperamental differences. Mary gets along well with all but the Italians and it looks as if they would have to go. Next season Chicago will have its grand opera without the Italian stars. Maybe this seems impossible, but Mary Garden says it can be done—in fact, she can do some of it herself. She is strong for the Allies—except the Italians.

AT THE RINGSIDE.

New York society women have exchanged the pink tea for the prize fight as an amiable diversion. A finish affair between a couple of clever lightweights will furnish more thrills than an all-night session at auction bridge. The smart set turned out in unholy numbers for the Leonard and Mitchell battle and the buds will presently be discussing wallops and uppercuts instead of the mild scandal of the beauty shops. Women like the taste of blood almost as much as do the men and there is just about enough of it in an evening at the ringside to set the pulses tingling. Of course, there are millions of folk who will feel properly shocked at the idea of a company of women watching a ring battle between a couple of professional fighters. But the gladiators not only enjoy it; they get richly paid for it. There may be half a dozen scraps without enough gore to stain an eyelash. The blood that is spilled may be paid for at a dollar a drop, and think how much could be had if one advertised to pay for it at that price. Now that the boxing game has been legalized in New York and other States and the bouts are handled through an official commission it is hardly necessary to worry about the decadence of the world.

A STUDY IN VALUES.

WHEN it comes to real values, "absent treatment" of any sort is useless. To be of applied value clothes must be practically available when needed. To be of applied value food must be available when a man is hungry. If the vapors and fogs which are hanging about this thirsty land would condense themselves in the form of rain they would be of great applied value. Real values are applicable to real needs. Real values are neither theoretical nor evanescent. They are essential and substantial. Water is of no value to a thirsty man unless he can drink it. Food is of no value to a hungry man, unless he can consume it. Clothes are of no value to a nude beggar, unless he can wear them. And of what value is money, unless it can be applied to the supplying of some need?

Needs and supplies must be brought together. Therein lies the whole secret of the ministry of values. The light is of no use if it can not be turned on in the dark. The healing salve must be actually spread on the sore spot. You can not paint a house by looking at the colors on a card. Music must utter itself before it is music. Values must get themselves applied before they are values. The professionol priest and Levite passed by the victim who had been beaten and bruised by thieves. It was the Good Samaritan who gave him value of practical service. Of what use are priests and Levites, if they do not get under the load. We need a revaluation of things in economics, in education, in labor, in human society, in statecraft, in religion.

We need a larger study in economic values. That word means house-keeping. Good house-keeping is good economics. But we are now applying the word "economics" to community house-keeping, to municipal house-keeping, to State house-keeping, to national house-keeping. Are we really wise economists in any of these spheres of need? When we get down to sober thinking and are really honest with ourselves, do we not have to confess that we have a painful overplus of selfish profiteering in all of these spheres of economics? Even from the standpoint of ease and satisfaction, could we not serve ourselves well on much less than we do? Could we not serve others much more than we do? We are told from the secular sources, not from the records of the Christian journals, that for two single items of luxury our American folks are spending three billions of dollars per year. The January number of Current Opinion tells us that we spend one billion a year for candy and two billions for tobacco. If ten dollars will save a hungry child a whole year from starving in the eastern land, how many starving children would three billions of dollars save? Here is a timely problem for proud and prosperous Americans to solve. Do we not need to pause and think deeply on economical values?

II.

THIS study in values would lead us to fresh consideration of the daily arrival from Europe in Ellis Island. Who is it that is coming? Are they friends of our flag, or foes of our flag? What do they know or care about the great humane ideals of Americanism? Do these tens of thousands come to stand by American standards, or do they come to sneer at American standards? AMERICA MUST RECKON WITH THIS QUESTION, AND IT WERE BETTER FOR THE PEACE AND PROSPERITY OF THE WORLD TO RECKON WITH IT NOW.

> Are these who come our friends or foes,
> Are these the men that Freedom knows?
> Will they love industry and peace,
> Will they help old world troubles cease?
> Or will they strengthen on our soil,
> And use that strength our land to spoil?
> If thou art wise, my Native Land,
> Before thou givest them thy hand,
> Thou will require them to stand
> Forevermore by our faith.

We need a revaluation of the meaning of education. We need to know, as by this time we ought to know, that a people may be educated in the wrong direction as well as in the right direction. A people may be educated in false ideas, and go on the rocks, as did Germany, or they may be educated in true ideas and sail the seas in safety. Education in evil always drives toward a dark destiny. Education in right is a torchlight procession toward the worthwhile goals of life. Half an eye can see that this is true with men and with nations. We have seen that one generation educated in a fallacy can wreck an empire and plunge a world into the dark. We must at once ponder deeply this whole matter of education. Let us revive the humanitarian studies in our schools everywhere. Not that we love science less, but that we love humanity more. We must know that education will be dangerous and deadly, unless it be right education in the right. Our education must be of the right quality. And our educated faculties must release their energies in the right direction. We have lately learned, as we never knew before, that education may make or mar a people, according as it is education in the right or the wrong.

III.

WE MUST have a new valuation of law. Our citizenry must be insistent that the men who get their living by the law must themselves be lovers of the law. If the courts are to be supported by the people, they must serve the people. When a "criminal lawyer" is a criminal, the spirit of Americanism demands that he be dealt with as such. That country is headed for hell whose courts do not bring its criminals to heel. It is perfidy and disloyalty of the deepest dye which allow the outragers and slayers of women and girls, and the hold-up beast, and the all-round and brutal-handed and bloody-hearted sluggers to go unwhipped of justice. If childhood has not a right to claim the protection of manhood, who has? Where are our minions of the law and our guardians of the public, if the virtuous wife dare not cross an alley at twilight, lest she be strangled to the death by some beast of prey?

Let Abraham Lincoln speak on this weighty matter of the law: "Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well wisher to his posterity, swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of Seventy-six did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books and almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in the legislative halls and enforced in courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the nation."

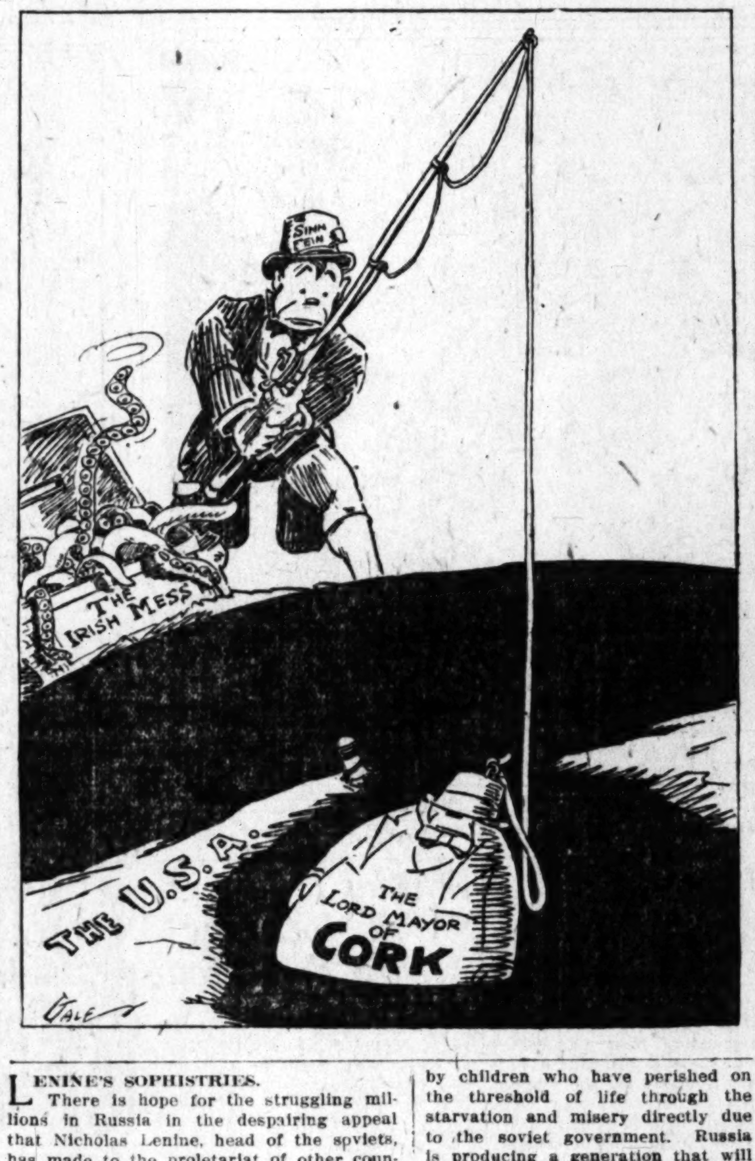
IV.

WE MUST have an enlarged valuation of the home. Let it be the school of beginnings in character and in citizenship. Let it be the starting place for men and women in the highest sanctions of life. Only fools burlesque marriage and the human home. It is to be deplored that a number of these are now running at large in this America of ours. Wreck the nurturing place of childhood, and you wreck the sources of a decent civilization. We MAY conserve our timber, our coal, our waterways, but we MUST create and conserve the human home. When any people has lost its home it has lost its civilization. The man or woman who strikes at the heart of the home, strikes at the heart of this nation. For, be it known that of all things, America is a great neighborhood of co-operative communities and homes. We must have a closer and more careful conservation of the human home. Let its sacredness be safeguarded by every power of our republic. Let no jest of fools, male or female, cheapen our estimate of the home.

V.

WE NEED a larger valuation of human life and the human soul. Let the crazy speedster and the brutal gangster know that when he smothers out that vital flame, it can neither be rekindled nor recalled. The wise man thinks before. The fool, if he thinks at all, thinks afterward. It takes a genius to build a pipe organ, but a mouse may spoil it. It takes skill to weave a silken robe, but a miserable moth can mar it forever. Let our homes, our schools, our churches and our agencies of the law co-operate to conserve the infinite values of human life. The real values of art, of music, of literature, of science, of invention, and of all the skill of man find their sources in and flow from the everlasting fountains of the human soul. We must have a larger valuation of all these sources of hope and happiness. Nothing will repay us so richly as a fresh and large study of values.

We Don't Seem to be Biting!



LENINE'S SOPHISTRIES.

There is hope for the struggling millions in Russia in the despairing appeal that Nicholas Lenine, head of the soviets, has made to the proletariat of other countries for "swift action on their part" in setting up Bolshevist dictatorships. "If a general rising of workers takes place outside Russia," he argues, "Russia and the world will be saved. If it does not take place soon this great experiment in Russia may fail and the inevitable triumph of the toilers be postponed for fifty years."

That Macedonian cry sounds much like an admission that the equality of misery which is sought by the soviets in Russia cannot exist as long as there are happy, contented and well-fed peoples in other parts of the world. Conscript labor in Russia cannot maintain itself against the wage system of other states. Millions of Russians have already fled the country and other millions are seeking to emigrate.

The Times printed last Friday a statement dictated by Lenine himself in order that its readers might learn from the lips of the Red dictator the state of the soviet government in Russia. For the first time since the Red revolution began Lenine expresses doubts as to its outcome. He admits that it is impossible for Communism to succeed in Russia while there are free governments elsewhere in the world. He says:

> If this great experiment fails the children at least will be grateful to us, for we have done our best for them; we have planted seed which will grow into a forest beneath whose shade capitalism cannot live. We have constituted for the first time in history a government of the poor and the oppressed. . . . The great French revolution placed the academic theories about the rights of man on a pinnacle from which they can never be displaced. Our Bolshevik revolution has graven forever on the heart of humanity the words, "Dictatorship of the proletariat."

It will be observed that Lenine says nothing about a Russian republic, nothing about a guarantee of liberty and equality to the governed. He boasts of establishing a "dictatorship," a form of government that can only be maintained by force. It seems incredible that he should imagine any enlightened people would exchange the institutions of free government for a dictatorship of any form.

Does Lenine really imagine that the American people will consent to exchange the institutions of free government which they received as a heritage from the founders of the republic for class dictatorship? Can he be sincere in his delusion that the people of Great Britain will surrender the rights that they have conquered after a battle of 400 years against autocratic privilege and accept a dictatorship more debasing and enslaving than any absolute monarchy that ever existed on British soil? It is difficult to escape the conclusion that a man who utters such absurdities is either a charlatan, a fool or a lunatic.

In forming his soviet republic Lenine adopted the forms of Communism that were tried in Italy and elsewhere centuries ago and abandoned as unsuited to the government of states. Communism in its proper application may be a benefit to society; for Communism means possession in common. But it must be a voluntary association. Whenever it is forced on individuals against their will it becomes tyranny. Every syndicate, every corporation is an application of the Communist principle. It is the possession of property in common among hundreds or thousands of individuals. But whenever the Communist principle is forced upon any number of individuals against their will it reduces them to a condition of serfdom. It is for this reason that the Communist principle is applicable to industry, where voluntary association permits intelligent co-operation, and not to government. Communism is like religion. Its acceptance or rejection must be a question not of force, but of free will. Dictatorship is the antithesis of free government, for it gives to a part dominion over the whole.

Some of Lenine's absurdities make one wonder whether the man is mentally unbalanced. When he says that "the children at least will be grateful to us" he seems to be unaware that there are a million graves in European Russia occupied by children who have perished on the threshold of life through the starvation and misery directly due to the soviet government. Russia is producing a generation that will pass undernourished to manhood and womanhood, if they escape with their lives, and that will suffer for the rest of their existence from the physical effects of life under the Bolshevist regime. The children of Russia will remember the years of Bolshevism with the terror of those who have passed through some deadly plague. Does Lenine imagine that the survivors will forget those who have perished at the hands of his soviet government?

Lenine laments the defection of many countries of Europe of those who were the leaders of Socialism in their youth. He says that:

> I discovered that 99 per cent of these Socialist orators and writers were for sale to the highest bidder. Socialist journalists whose clarion voices roused my young blood had sold themselves as slaves to capitalistic newspapers, or, worse still, had sold their newspapers and themselves at the same time. Socialist orators, having climbed into power on the shoulders of the people, had sold the people. What worse reactionaries are there today than Lloyd George, Clemenceau and Millerand.

If Lenine possessed a judicial temperament he would know that nine-tenths of Socialism has always been pure charlatanism. Its noisiest advocates have been agitators who exploited the ignorant workers and who were seeking only what they could get personally out of it. Socialism has never been aught but a maze of sophistries, contradictory in themselves. A few honest-minded persons have been misled by their illusions of youth into believing that its theories would lend themselves to practical application. Lloyd George, Clemenceau and Millerand are notable examples of this class. When they became intrusted with power and saw the disastrous effect of the application of such sophistries to the government of enlightened states they rejected the Socialistic theories almost in toto and accepted the principles of self-government on which the British, American and French constitutions are founded.

Socialism is no more practical than Bolshevism. Both have been tried repeatedly, at a terrible cost to the people of the states that espoused them, and have been found wanting.

The Russian peasant has suffered for 300 years from that greatest of all calamities, not serfdom but ignorance. Kerensky failed in his attempt to supplant autocracy with representative government because the Russian masses could not conceive a government wholly foreign to their maxims, their traditions and their customs. They accepted passively the "dictatorship of the proletariat" because they thought absolute power in the hands of a dictator was necessary to government. But they have been learning fast during the three years of misery through which they have passed since the dethronement of the Czar.

Lenine himself now admits that sovietism cannot continue in Russia if the rest of the world is not stricken by the same mental malady. But the rest of the world is turning its face resolutely against such an impossible machine for the direction of government and industry. These latest admissions from Lenine himself renew the hope that the plague of Bolshevism is about to pass with other great scourges from the face of the earth. It has already claimed about as many victims in Europe as the World War.

Point Isabel is no longer on the map of the world. Let's see, where was that town? Oh, yes, in Texas.

THE LANCER.

Two pleasant news items this week. President Wilson has purchased a $100,000 residence in Washington. Douglas and Mary Fairbanks have announced their intention of building three new sumptuous homes, one of which is to cost $500,000 at Beverly Hills, and others slightly less costly at Santa Barbara and Lake Como, Italy.

Many people feel that the President was ostentatiously extravagant. Most people feel that Doug and Many are entirely justified. We shall make a point of reminding our small children that if they are good they may grow up to be film stars.

The California Legislature is to be asked to pass a law penalizing persons who aid or authorize "libelous statements against races or religious sects." This because Henry Ford sponsored articles of an anti-Semitic nature in his Dearborn Independent.

But things are going to be mighty dull if a patriotic hyphenated Irish-American can't get up and speak his mind about English villainy, or an expatriated Ulsterman can't call a meeting to denounce Sinn Feiners, or an Armenian can't pass a few caustic remarks on the Turks, or the Chinese can't disgorge a few pent-up emotions on the Japanese, or a Frenchman can't unburden himself on the subject of Germans.

The trouble is that most of us have our pet hates and prejudices.

Mrs. Terence MacSwiney says that "Americans have lent a lot of money to England and they now want it back. They realize that it has all been used to murder people in Ireland."

A careful estimate makes this work out at about a couple of million per head for murdered Irishmen. We should certainly send one of our business efficiency experts over to England. We have a right to protest against this gross and wicked extravagance.

Mrs. Sadie Harrington of Danville, Ill., is reported to have fasted and prayed for forty-seven days to save her husband's soul, because he declines to change his religion for hers.

There is no one quite so embarrassing to live with as a person who insists upon sacrificing their life for you.

Dr. R. C. Augustine, president of the American Optometric Association, says that all blondes are subject to nerves and should wear blue glasses to keep them "steady." This particularly applies to blonde girls, he says.

We think ourselves that the blondes should wear blue glasses, not so much for their own sake as for the sake of susceptible young men whose "steadiness" is much more seriously jeopardized by the blonde girl's nerve.

Mrs. Clark McKee of the San Diego High School faculty scores the immodesty of the modern girl, who, she declares, learns to "vamp" from the pictures and has let down in actions and morals generally. And, of course, the modern short dresses are held largely responsible.

Never mind, girls, they wore 'em roomy and long in the sixteenth century and you ought to read what old Samuel Pepys said about 'em then. But you will find it hard to buy an unexpurgated edition.

At the shoe dealers' convention in Milwaukee it is reported that the girl waitresses appeared in bathing costume. Thirty beauteous damsels in Palm Beach bathing suits served food to the hungry shoemen. There have been plenty of critics of the moral issue involved, but what alarms me is the poor business perspicacity shown. Bathing girls do not wear shoes, or at best the merest skeleton of a shoe. Do the shoe men really wish it to be understood that femininity is more entrancing minus their product? That when it's up to them they prefer the human foot au naturel? Such altruistic honesty is refreshing, but is isn't good business.

Miss Orella Rexford, speaking at the metaphysicians' festival had profound remarks to make upon the influence of color on the human disposition. And, among other things she asserted that black was affected by women who "desire to be obscure and unnoticed."

Oh, Orella, my dear! Tell that to the little Parisienne who always manages to be more intriguingly conspicuous in black than any other color. Tell that to the fashionable modistes, whose clients demand that "exclusive and different look." Tell that to the milliner whose life is devoted to evolving chefs d'oeuvres in black millinery. Tell that to the piquant widow who is so mindful of the possibilities of smart weeds. Tell that to the stage adventurers who invariably appear in sheaths of black spangles.

Walt Mason is deploring the fact that education incapacitates us for "weeding the onion bed and whitewashing the fence," and that one of the things that is wrong with this star-spangled land is overeducation. No, Walt, it is a little education that is a dangerous thing. Your really educated person is invariably industrious—had to be to acquire the education. Moreover, it is an English college girl who is Britain's potato queen, planting, crossing, digging them herself. Educated people invent things—washing machines, soap, carpet sweepers, sewing machines. There isn't such a thing as overeducation. Not yet. But a smattering of education—ah, there is the rub. RAISIN "TRUST" YET TO UPBUILD INLAND EMPIRE

Fresno Co-operative Company Has Made Millions for Growers and Won Public Loyalty.

For the first time since "trust" became popular, a so-called trust has won a place in the [illegible] of the people best acquainted with it, and for the first time it is more than probable that a long and [illegible] litigation on the subject [illegible] avoided. The net result is [illegible] the California Associated [illegible] Company will continue to [illegible] and that its head, Wylie [illegible] Giffen of Fresno, will continue [illegible] an organization which he [illegible] "has built an Eden in the [illegible] of the desert, and fixed the [illegible] idea of co-operation in the [illegible] of man."

[illegible] conference Friday afternoon, [illegible] by representatives of the [illegible], the raisin company and [illegible] interests, it was tentatively [illegible] that some minor changes in [illegible] policy of the company [illegible] adopted and that the suit of [illegible] government against the company charging monopoly and coercion [illegible] be dropped. No official [illegible] is obtainable until Atty.-[illegible] reviews the action of [illegible] participated in the conference, but it is known that representatives of the company have returned to their offices in Fresno, [illegible] to make their previously [illegible] campaign for contracts [illegible] the growers. This campaign, agreed in a stipulation before [illegible] federal courts, will not begin [illegible] after February 1.

PROGRESS EMPHASIZED.

The suit of the government against the raisin company has brought forward much information as to what the organization has accomplished, and has called attention to one of the most wonderful business organizations in the State.

It is fair to say that the California Associated Raisin Company has built a city and financed an empire. Fresno, with more than 60,000 population, owes its growth and prosperity to the company, and a part of the San Joaquin Valley a hundred miles square, is populated by 12,000 vineyardists who received approximately $52,000,000 for their 1920 crop of grapes.

[illegible] years ago the average California grape grower was only hoping for the time when he could in some manner get money enough to pull up his grape vines and plant a more profitable crop. Today growers of other crops are putting every available acre to raisin grapes, in the hope of participating in the continued prosperity promised by what seems to be a never-ending demand for the product of the vineyards.

[illegible] years ago, with a yearly average production of 70,000 tons, raisins were a drug on the market, not giving the grower even the smallest margin of profit. Today, with a crop of 170,000 tons completely sold, the demand for raisins is in excess of the supply.

TRADE CREATED.

This condition, contend officials of the raisin company, is responsible for the higher prices. The company officials say they have been able to create the demand by intensive advertising and by the packing of a superior product under one brand name. This, they say, could not have been accomplished under the old system. They maintain, too, that they have not been [illegible] in restraint of trade, as charged by the government, but on the contrary have been [illegible] which created trade.

Prior to 1912, when the present organization came into being, say growers of the Fresno district, it was the practice of independent packers to hold a quantity of inferior raisins from the end of one season until the beginning of the next. At that time, it is said, they would flood the market with low-grade stock, so that when the new crop came in, there was a small demand and a low price prevailed. As the crop was used entirely as an instrument of speculation, raisin growers rarely received more than 3 cents a pound for their crop in the field. This year, under the co-operative system, they received 15 cents.

And 15 cents is in no manner the price that could have been received had it been demanded. This was proved by the fact that in September the association sent a large consignment of raisins to New York to be offered in the auction sales, so that a price could be established that was not considered arbitrary. While the 15-cent price for the grower was said in some quarters to have been out of all reason, the dried grapes sold at auction for a figure which would have returned to the grower 18 cents a pound, and the man who bought the consignment sold it at a price that netted him $50,000 profit.

The association owns and operates a string of modern packing plants all through the valley and in the season gives employment to hundreds of workers aside from those who do the actual field work.

In Fresno, where the general offices are maintained, an army of clerks is on the pay roll, so that, taken as a whole, the association is of direct benefit to practically every resident of the Raisin City and to all dwellers for miles beyond its limits.

LITTLE COMPLAINT.

Virtually every resident of the town is in accord with the policies of the company and in no quarter can complaint as to its business dealings be found. Nearly the only objectors are independent packers who are prevented by the terms of the association contracts from buying raisins from the growers and who are unable to speculate on the crop. Under the new arrangement it is probable that a certain tonnage of the crop will be turned over to these private interests, but the quantity will not be sufficient to permit of unstabilizing the market.

"Raisins are a luxury," says President Giffen, "and if by organization and an increased demand we have forced the price to where it means a profit to the grower, we have attained an end perfectly justifiable and have harmed no one."

In reviewing the things which have made the association a success Mr. Giffen said the other day: "In the belief that the world could be induced to consume every raisin that California could grow, we gave our best attention to coaxing the world to agree with us. We did it by advertising. We established our own brand of raisins and began to popularize that brand. Our first advertising appropriation was small. We devoted our space to the advertising of raisin bread. Meantime we sent our salesmen over the country and induced the bakers to take a big consignment of raisins off our hands. This was the start. Raisin bread became an article in demand in every bakery.

"Our 'hold-over' crop ceased to be one of our worries, but we had to look to the future and the probable yearly increase in production, which was certain to follow if prosperity came from our co-operative efforts.

"We began to advertise raisin recipes. We sought through the pages of newspapers and magazines to teach the housewife how to prepare dainty, tasty and tempting dishes in which raisins are required. That brought results, greater even than our raisin-bread campaign.

"This season's crop of raisins approximates in round numbers 170,000 tons. It is 30,000 tons below the estimate of last spring, and is nearly 20,000 tons less than the 1919 crop. It is 100,000 tons greater, however, than the 70,000-ton average crop of the five years preceding 1912, the first year of the company's existence, when 40,000 tons were left as a 'hold-over.' In other words, production has more than doubled. But the production has not kept pace with the increased consumption. Our 170,000 tons have been eagerly seized and if we had available twice that tonnage, we would experience little difficulty in disposing of it.

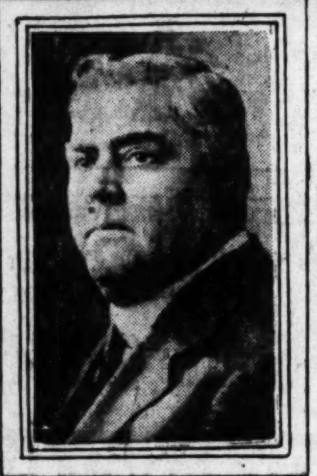
"For this demand there is no question that the Eighteenth Amendment is to some extent responsible. We realize that raisins are being freely used in 'home brew' concoctions, but it has been our effort to discourage their use in this direction and to encourage their use in the kitchen. With this thought in mind, the price we established this year is higher for our loose raisins in bulk than for our fancy seeded or manufactured raisins in cartons. If not one single raisin went into 'home brew,' we are confident we would have no trouble in disposing of our crop at prevailing prices.

BEFORE "HOME BREW."

"In 1918 the total raisin crop was 160,000 tons. At this time there was no thought of using raisins for other than culinary purposes. Yet the entire tonnage was consumed many weeks before the crop of 1919 was ready to be put onto the market.

"As to what the future may hold, who can say? Prices eventually will come down. Of that I have no doubt. New acreage is constantly being planted and instead of the 200,000 tons we regard as the normal production of today, we shall have to reckon with perhaps 400,000 tons. We shall necessarily have to develop markets abroad. We shall have to come into more direct competition with the raisins of Spain, Smyrna and Australia. We shall also have to continue educating our own people as to the value of raisins as food, and thereby increase home consumption to keep pace with production.

"I do not believe that the raisin industry can ever decline to its old level. I believe that it has been stabilized sufficiently to insure against that, and I feel that greater than the fixing of the immediate price or the guaranteeing of an assured profit, is the example of the California Associated Raisin Company in co-operative marketing by farmers."



Wylie M. Giffen.

REGULATION OF HOTELS URGED.

Traveling Salesmen's Body Charges "Profiteering."

Asks Federal Commision to Investigate Conditions.

List Lofty Prices Met in Hostelries, Restaurants.

Local members of the National Traveling Salesmen's Association express much interest in and give emphatic endorsement to the subjoined article in the Talking Machine World:

A list of specific cases of extortionate charges for rooms and restaurant service by many hotels throughout the country patronized by traveling salesmen is being prepared by a committee appointed a few days ago by the National Council of Traveling Salesmen's Association, to be presented to a Federal commission which the council has asked the government authorities to appoint at an early date. The attention of Atty.-Gen. Palmer has been called to what the council terms "unjust and unreasonable and, in many instances, oppressive charges made upon the traveling public by many hotels and restaurants." Resolutions urging that the government take steps to curtail the evil of hotel profiteering which, it is stated, exists to a greater or less extent in all parts of the country, have been sent to many Congressmen, the United States Chamber of Commerce and other influential bodies, asking that the earliest possible consideration be given to the matter.

In the resolutions adopted by the salesmen's associations, the resolutions asking for the appointment of a Federal commission request that it be empowered to investigate any and all hotels and restaurants throughout the country as to the nature of their business dealings, the charges that are made for food and lodging, to determine whether such charges are unjust and discriminatory and any and all other matters which in the judgment of such commission may be appropriate to the end that hotels wil be precluded from making extortionate charges; to prohibit and prevent hotels from unjustly withholding rooms from guests; to preclude the increase of rates at various hotels because of temporary congestion; to inspect the sanitary conditions of hotels; to fix and determine the reasonable rates that hotels and restaurants may be permitted to charge, which shall be based upon the cost of maintenance of such hotels and restaurants, depending upon the locations of such institutions; to prohibit and prevent the payment by hotels and restaurants to their employees, such as managers, directors, proprietors and others, of excessive, unjust and arbitrary salaries and bonuses, which in many instances is done in order to fix unreasonable and unjustifiable overhead expenses.

It is also sought to compel the proprietors and owners of hotels and restaurants to pay adequate wages to their employees, so as to prevent the necessity for the payment of gifts and gratuities; to eliminate from hotels and restaurants the present hat checking privileges; to regulate the basis upon which house physicians employed by various hotels shall be paid, so as to prevent and prohibit the division of fees now existing in many hotels among hotel manager, hotel proprietor and such physicians; to compel the posting of rates in all hotels; to compel such restaurants and hotels to maintain records of room reservations and table reservations which shall be kept in such manner as may be determined by the commission; to do and perform all other acts and things necessary and conducive to the attainment of the foregoing objects or of any and all other objects which may be deemed proper.

DIVORCED FROM "NOMADIC" WIFE.

Superintendent of Schools Introduces New Word in Decree Suit.

Prof. William Frederick Ringnalda introduced a new word in divorce history. He was seeking a divorce from Josephine Vasche Ringnalda, whom he charged in Judge Summerfield's court yesterday with deserting him.

In explaining his domestic troubles Prof. Ringnalda declared his wife is "nomadic." Hitherto this has been styled the wanderlust. The professor meant that his wife cannot settle down long in any one place. This is not favorable to his practicing his profession; he is superintendent of schools in the Newhall district. The decree was granted.

HAS TO DIP INTO LISLE MONEY BANK.

Lady Barber Protests, but Makes Refund to Customer Who Yelled at Trimming.

"J. Kiefer's Revenge, or the Tragedy of the Los Angeles Lady Barber Who Trimmed Not Wisely, but Too Well."

CHAPTER II.

City Prosecutor Widney's detective visited the lady barber of South Main street yesterday. He showed his badge.

"Lady," said the officer, "are you the one who trimmed J. Kiefer out of $5 for about $2 worth of barbering?"

"I am that lady," said the barber, "but I am not a profiteer; not by a darned sight. Do you know what that there J. Kiefer bought of me? Why, dod gast him, I shaved him, I cut his hair, I massaged his face, I washed his head, I sprayed him with costly perfume, besides giving him $10 worth of my most lively conversation."

"Lady," said the officer, "you have my deepest sympathy, but I want $2.35 to give back to J. Kiefer."

"Robber! Thief!" shouted the lady barber.

"Two dollar and thirty-five cents," said the officer, and the lady barber went into her lisle thread cash register and produced two wrinkled, aged dollar bills and some silver.

"Officer," said the lady barber, "'you tell J. Kiefer I want to see him."

"Lady," he replied, "J. Kiefer visits lady barbers no more."

MILK :: FUND :: REPORT :: IS :: MADE.

Humanitarian Work is Told in Figures.

She is One of the Grateful Ones.

The check held by little Miss Anonymous was sent forward yesterday by the Salvation Army to complete its payment for milk supplied needy children in 1920.

As a part of its humanitarian work the Salvation Army paid $14,975.76 to provide 90,000 quarts of grade A milk for poor children during 1920, says a report issued yesterday by Brig. Boyd. A check for $2025 in final payment for the milk supplied the needy in 1920 was put in the mails yesterday.

Under the Salvation Army's helping-hand system milk tickets are distributed through the nurses of the health department, under the direction of Chief Nurse Talcott, to children who report regularly to the city clinics for medical examination and treatment.

These children are weighed at least once a week and their progress carefully watched by the doctors and nurses. According to Brig. Boyd, fully 85 per cent of those who receive milk show regular improvement and increase in weight after the first month, and many show improvement after the first week or two.

To keep up the good work during the present work, $20,000 is needed, according to Brig. Boyd. Of this 25 per cent will come from the Salvation Army's own fund, and the rest must be furnished by those who believe that to be human is to do something for humanity. None of the contributed money goes for administration. In other words, every dollar that you contribute to the milk fund will go to buy milk for a needy child.

Albanians Not Brigands; Need American Help.

"Albanians are not a race of brigands," declared Dr. C. Telford Erickson, Albanian commissioner to the United States, at the noon luncheon of the City Club yesterday. "They are a peaceful, honorable, thrifty, liberty-loving people who have for twenty-six centuries fought for the independence of their country," he said. "They are free now and are establishing a stable government. They need the help of American experts on education, railroading, finance and other branches in order to modernize the country."

Traffic conditions in the city and the local housing problem will be discussed at the open forum of the City Club tomorrow night, and at the noon luncheon of the club on Wednesday the sewer problem of the city will be the subject of talks by R. W. Hadden and Kenneth MacRea. At the luncheon next Saturday Dr. Sherwood Eddy will speak on "Conditions in Europe."

WAR RISK INSURANCE OPENS BRANCH HERE.

SENDS FIELD REPRESENTATIVE TO HANDLE ALL BUSINESS SOUTH OF TEHACHEPI.

Headquarters for Southern California for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance have been opened by the United States Treasury Department at 226 South Broadway, and are in charge of Harold L. Shepp, who has been appointed field representative by the department.

Mr. Shepp, who lived in Los Angeles for eleven years prior to 1918, has been field examiner for the bureau with headquarters at San Francisco for the last year, and prior to that handled bureau work in New York and in Pennsylvania. His new territory includes all of the territory south of the Tehachepi, and his work will be carried on in co-operation with the United States Public Health Service and with the representatives of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

All matters having to do with compensation or insurance under the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, which have heretofore been handled here for ex-service men by the Red Cross, the American Legion or the Disabled Veterans' Association, will now receive immediate official attention from the bureau's new representative in this field.

SAYS FILM IS JUNK.

Author Wants showing Stopped; Calls it Cuttings From His Play.

Presiding Judge Shenk yesterday issued a temporary injunction in the suit of the Corona Cinema Company against Ernest Cagnor, Lloyd B. Carlton, John Doe Rutledge and L. J. Lazarus, asking that they be restrained from exhibiting a film play named "Who's to Blame."

Harry F. Scofield declares he is the author of the cinema play "Curse of God," and it is charged in the complaint that "Who's to Blame," was prepared from cuttings of "Curse of God," given to Mr. Carlton who said he wanted the cuttings for junk. Mr. Carlton is said to have made negatives from the cuttings which he pasted together under a new title and delivered to the other defendants.

Constipation.

Constipation of the bowels is a stoppage of the sewerage system that removes waste matter from the body. It is as necessary that your bowels move regularly once each day, to carry off this waste, as it is that the waste pipes of your home be kept open and carry off the waste from the house. If you would enjoy good health, keep your bowels regular by taking Chamberlain's Tablets when needed.—[Advertisement.

MADE HER WORK, SO LOSES HER.

Husband Cruel, Charges Wife; Specifies Forced Labor in His Store.

Mrs. Sophie Levy in Judge Walton J. Wood's court yesterday charged Jack Levy with cruelty. When asked to specify the acts she replied:

"Well, he made me work in his store."

She added to this the incident of the lamp. Mr. Levy became angry while celebrating a holiday and threw the lamp at her, she said. It struck her on the head. He also called her names and used profanity, she related. She was granted a decree.

Federal Booze Fines Showing Steady Growth.

Charles N. Williams, clerk of the United States District Court, in a statement completed yesterday, shows the receipts of the government from fines in what are known as liquor cases during the year 1920.

The total amounts to $85,716.62. The receipts by quarters are as follows: First quarter, $12,852.88; second quarter, $21,425.69; third quarter, $25,020.05; fourth quarter, $26,418.

No calculation is made of the amounts assessed by judgment of the local Federal court. The figures given show the amount received during the year just closed.

The courts have in some instances doubled the fines assessed in the first quarter for the same class of cases, and both U. S. District Judges Trippet and Bledsoe have announced their intention to impose jail sentences in addition to stiff fines, in every case where the accused is either found guilty or pleads guilty to the charge of peddling intoxicants of any kind.

BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLES

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache.

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with uric acid which the kidneys strive to filter out. They weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a teaspoonful in a glass of water before vreakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage, and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.—[Advertisement.

DISCOVERS CAUSE OF FALLING HAIR

Chicago Specialist Says Greatest Percentage of Baldness Due to Alopecia Pityrodes

Prof. John H. Austin, over 40 years a bacteriologist, hair and scalp specialist, who now has offices at Hamburger's, says this scalp disorder is often mistaken for common "dandruff."

Alopecia pityrodes starts with a scaling of the scalp, sometimes slight, commonly called "dandruff," sometimes abundant — producing thick, grayish-white, dry or greasy scales—which leads to falling of the hair. This stage lasts from two to seven years, as a rule. At first, when the hair starts to fall, it is hardly noticeable, but as this ailment, "Alopecia Pityrodes" becomes more deeply seated, and the micro-bacilli multiply, as they always do, the falling of the hair increases rapidly and in time the top of the head becomes entirely bald.

Prof. Austin has found that only the most powerful microscope can determine the exact trouble with which the hair and scalp are afflicted, and he proved that the use of mange cures, dandruff cures, hair tonics, vaseline and elixirs is like taking medicine without knowing what you are trying to cure.

FREE MICROSCOPIC EXAMINATION of the hair and scalp—both men and women invited. Private Offices, Second Floor, Hamburger's. Hours 10 to 12 and 2 to 4.—[Advertisement.

and a gunman was hired to kill the first Bing Kong opportunity afforded. Bing gunman was hired Four Families individuals so event that their plans with the blame could onto the Hop Sings. By woman the Four Families felt they could cast on Lew Quan Oon and organization. The way gunman is not to ular man, but to shoot happens to belong to has a grudge against." the motive for the Bing Kong men were law of the tongs states shall be evened.

OF DEATH.

the wars of the tongs and no law of the has yet succeeded in They may cease of a few years, but vengeful spirit arises and break out afresh. Long was discovered, and generations before of the North American in their first tribal of death were sown in the tongmen. Then, with of aliens that swamped the this far country during the seeds of vengeance were the Pacific to bear harvest.

Chinese societies, prin of families of the old with formulas of oaths ritual, linked them together in blood pacts, the to descend to all those the ages to come were to surnames of the amalga families.

tong is the Four Families. four men loved each oth brothers. They were Lau, Chong and Chu. They made pact, and, as a result, the Four Families is one of the mightiest of tongs. In like manner did the Hop Sings and the Bing Kongs organize themselves, so long ago that even the patriarchs of Chinatown do not know of the incidents that led up to the creation of their tongs.

The tongs, in the dark ages of China, engaged themselves in ridding the imperial throne of undesirable rulers, and in fulfilling these self-appointed duties they took oath that they and their children and their children's children would drive out the undesirable ones.

But China has since changed. There are no imperial ones ruling the provinces as in ancient days. Likewise, the purpose of the tongs' existence has changed, so gambling has become the genesis of tong strife in this country. Other causes sometimes arise to fan the feudal flame—the theft of a Chinese bride or an insult hurled at a rival tongman's ancestors—but when a rival tongman is known to "tip off" the police of a gambling game in progress, which usually results in a raid on the den, then that rival tongman, or any member of his tong, must die. It matters not to one tong which member of the rival tong is killed. The death of any member of that tong evens the score. Gambling is a sacred heritage of certain classes of Chinese and to prevent him from enjoying the pleasures of this heritage is not so easily done.

TO CORNER GAMBLING.

Tong troubles are often precipitated by one tong endeavoring to gain control of gambling privileges in Chinatown. Several years ago the plot of a scheming lawyer to reap rich harvests from the lottery dens was discovered and a tragic tong war was narrowly averted.

The Bing Kongs controlled all the lottery dens in Chinatown and the Hop Sings those outside the area. Through the lawyer it was planned to permit the Hop Sings to open a few lottery places in the Bing Kong territory, under the patronage of the Bing Kongs. The lawyer, an agent of the Hop Sings, had promised protection to the Bing Kongs for this privilege. Raids were to be prevented and their cases were to be dismissed in the police courts through the supposed influence of the lawyer with the administration. But when the Bing Kongs presented their conditions to the Hop Sings, the hatchet men of the two tongs began to flock into town.

Leaders of the two tongs were marked for death. Then a series of raids on the Bing Kong dens were lauched by the police. The heads of the tongs could not understand why the police should interrupt their peaceful games with the swinging of axes, for they had been promised protection. But they were informed that police protection could not be purchased and they were promised additional destructive raids unless they agreed to peace terms, so the tong war was called off—not abandoned forever, but merely postponed—for the tongs will never cease their warfare.

WARS NEAR PLAZA.

As long as thirty-one years ago, and that is as far back into Chinatown history as the slant-eyed sages care to go, the Hop Sings and the Bing Kongs were battling in the narrow passageways east of the Plaza. There was a pandemonium of shouts and much scuffling of feet and Fong Lung, a Bing Kong man, was found dead, with a bullet hole through his body.

Thirteen years ago there was another tong war here. Chen Hee, a Bing Kong man, was cornered in Napa Alley and killed, and for this offense, two Hop Sing men were sent to the penitentiary.

According to the Bing Kongs, the shootings are always started by the Hop Sings. They admit that Hop Sings are sometimes slain by the Bing Kongs, but not until after a Bing Kong man is killed by a Hop Sing, they say.

In May, 1912, Chin Loy Hong, a wealthy merchant, was slain and Yee Hop was wounded by Hop Sing highbinders. Both were Bing Kong men. This war had its origin in San Francisco, following the kidnaping of a Chinese slave girl. It shifted to Oakland, where several Chinese were killed, and then the talons of vengeance reached southward to Los Angeles. Chin Loy Hong and Yee Hop had nothing to do with the kidnaping, but they were members of an enemy tong, and so were marked for death. The girl had been sold to a Hop Sing tong man for $1500 and when her master learned that she had fled with a man of the other tong, he called in his relatives and they appealed to the enemy tong leaders for help. But the kidnaper's tong refused to make their member give up the girl and the war was on.

THIRTY CHINESE SLAIN.

Before this war was stopped by the high and mighty ones of the Peace Association in San Francisco, more than thirty Chinese were slain in the Coast cities.

Gangs of professional highbinders, paid gunmen who received their money from heavy bounties placed on the heads of marked tongmen, have often been imported into Los Angeles to start tong battles but many have been averted by hurried consultations between the police and the higher and invisible powers of Chinatown.

The dominating faction in Chinatown is the Chinese Chamber of Commerce. When any controversy arises between tongs, the rivals present their cases to the chamber. Presiding over this body is Sen Wing Wo, who represents the financial powers, and his word is law to the Chinese.

American judges do not settle the arguments of the tongs. They may think they do, but they don't. It is the body of weighty men in the Chinese colony that practically rules Chinatown, though no person seems to know whence it gets its powers of government. All serious disputes are settled by this body—even crimes which do not reach the ears of the police. If they decree that the fires of vengeance be quenched, their word is usually obeyed. But if they fail to bring about peace, then the case is transferred to those even higher in power who sit in San Francisco as the Chinese General Peace Council. The decisions of the peace association are as great as the word of their gods.

BLOOD TALLY EVENED.

If a blood tally is opened, then the peace association has no work to do. In April, 1917, Lee Chung was dozing behind a cigar counter in a Chinese clubroom at 323 Marchessault street. The hour was 2 a.m. The front door suddenly swung open, admitting three men. One emptied a revolver at Lee Chung, who fell to the floor, dead. Hop Sing men killed him.

Chinatown for two weeks shuffled quietly along about its business. Then on the afternoon of April 29 a stranger followed Woo Hung Chung, a merchant, into a small alley. Chung's body was riddled with bullets. The murderer escaped, though 100 inhabitants of Chinatown witnessed the shooting. Had he been captured he probably never would have been convicted, for tongmen never will testify against each other. This is the peculiar feature of tong justice that puts the police in despair. A Bing Kong man may be slain by a Hop Sing man, but on the witness stand the minds of the slain man's friends are a blank slate, thoroughly sponged of all recollection.

But the tally was evened, which was a fulfillment of the law of the tongs. As long, however, as the reckoning of victims shows a balance of deaths in favor of the other tong, there is no stopping the feud. The score must balance before peace is secure.

The tong method of warfare is uncanny. The gunmen do not stand bravely in the open and fight an even-sided duel. A gunman seldom tracks his quarry alone. More often he obtains the services of two confederates. The trio trail their prey into dark passages and pump lead into the back of the marked man. The gunmen do not run. With the scurrying of scores of Chinese to the scene of the shooting the gunmen leisurely leave the crowd and disappear. The gun used in the killing is always "ditched"—tossed carelessly into the gutter.

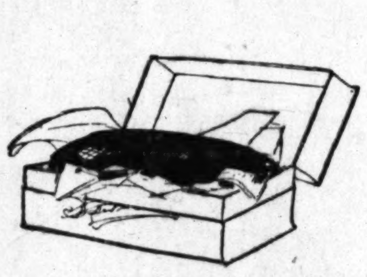
Palm and olive oils were Cleopatra's cosmetics. They were the luxuries of the Greek and Roman baths.

They were the basis of all ancient beauty. Now modern experts go overseas to get them, and blend them for you in this scientific way.

There never has been, and never will be, anything to match them for the skin.



Other soaps cost five times more

There are soaps which cost five times as much as Palmolive. Most facial soaps are higher priced. But there are no soap ingredients more costly than palm and olive oils.

There is nothing so luxurious.

It is only because we make it for millions that Palmolive sells at 10c.

Palmolive factories work day and night to supply the demand. The costly oils are bought in enormous quantities.

Result, the popular 10-cent price and the most popular toilet soap in the world.

Fortunate is the woman who can answer "yes." But many a woman, if she is honest with herself, is forced to be in doubt—after that she pays stricter attention to her personal attractions.

A radiant skin, glowing and healthy, is more than a "sign" of youth. It is youth. And any woman can enjoy it.

Beauty's basis is pure, mild, soothing soap. Never go to sleep without using it. Women should never overlook this all-important fact. The basis of beauty is a thoroughly clean skin. And the only way to it is soap.

There is no harm in cosmetics, or in powder, rouge, if you frequently remove them. Never leave them on overnight.

The skin consists of countless glands and pores. They clog with oil, with dirt, with perspiration—with refuse from within and without.

The first requirement is to cleanse those pores. And soap alone can do that.

A costly mistake

Harsh, irritating soaps have led many women to omit soap. That is a costly mistake. A healthy, rosy, clear, smooth skin must be a clean skin, first of all.

There is no need for irritating soap. Palmolive soothes and softens while it cleans. It is based on palm and olive oils.

Force the lather into the pores by a gentle massage. Every touch is balmy. Then all the foreign matter comes out in the rinsing.

If your skin is very dry, use cold cream before and after washing.

No medicaments

Palmolive is just a soothing, cleansing soap. Its blandness comes through blending palm and olive oils. Nothing since the world began has proved so suitable for delicate complexions.

All its beneficial effects come through gentle, thorough cleaning. There are no medicaments. No drugs can do what Nature does when you aid her with this scientific Palmolive cleansing.

Millions of women get their envied complexions through the use of Palmolive soap.

RUSSIA AND CHINA SECRET ALLIES.

Statesman Reveals Truth About Hidden, Broken Treaty That Opened Way for Trans-Siberian Railway and Would Have Warded Off War With Japanese.

BY COUNT SERGIUS WITTE,
Minister of Finance and Premier of Russia Under Czar Nicholas II.

[The following is the eighth of a series of extracts from the private memoirs of Count Witte and is the second dealing with the relations of Russia and China. [Editor, The Times.]

Li Hung Chang was sent to Russia as China's Ambassador extraordinary. He had been governor-general of the province of Chi Li and at the time of his appointment occupied the post of First Chancellor, the most exalted office in the empire. It seemed fantastic that the first dignitary of China should be sent as an emissary to a foreign sovereign and the unprecedented event caused a sensation. The distinguished envoy arrived in St. Petersburg on April 18 (30,) 1896, three weeks before the coronation solemnities. By sending such a high dignitary to witness this ceremony the Chinese wished to express their gratitude to our youthful Emperor for all his benefactions to the Chinese Empire.

In the meantime the great Trans-Siberian Railway, which was under construction, had reached Trans-Baikalia and the question arose as to the further direction which the railroad should follow. I conceived the idea of building the road straight across Chinese territory, principally Mongolia and Northern Manchuria, on toward Vladivostok. This direction, I calculated, would considerably shorten the line and facilitate construction. Considering the enormous mileage of the Trans-Siberian, it was natural to seek to shorten the route.

In my conferences with Li Hung Chang I dwelt on the services which we had recently done to his country. I assured him that, having proclaimed the principle of China's territorial integrity, we intended to adhere to it in the future; but, to be able to uphold this principle, I argued, we must be in a position, in case of emergency, to render China armed assistance. Such aid we would not be able to render her until both European Russia and Vladivostok were connected with China by rail, our armed forces being concentrated in European Russia.

RUSSO-CHINESE PACT.

Naturally enough, Li Hung Chang raised objections. Nevertheless, I gathered from my talks with him that he would agree to my proposal if he were certain that our Emperor wished it. Therefore, I asked His Majesty to receive Li Hung Chang, which the emperor did. It was practically a private audience and it passed unnoticed by the press. As a result of my negotiations with the Chinese statesman, we agreed on the following three provisions of a secret pact to be concluded between Russia and China:

(1.) The Chinese Empire grants us permission to build a railroad within its territory along a straight line between Chita and Vladivostok, but the road must be in the hands of a private corporation. Li Hung Chang absolutely refused to accept my proposal that the road should be either constructed or owned by the treasury. For that reason we were forced to form a private corporation, the so-called Eastern Chinese Railroad Corporation. This body is, of course, completely in the hands of the government, but since nominally it is a private corporation, it is within the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Finances.

(2.) China agrees to cede us a strip of land sufficient for the construction and operation of the railway. Within that territory the corporation is permitted to have its own police and to exercise full and untrammelled authority. China takes upon herself no responsibilities with regard to the construction or operation of the road.

(3.) The two countries obligate themselves to defend each other in case Japan attacks the territory of China or our Far-Eastern maritime possessions.

DANGEROUS ALTERATION.

I reported the results of my negotiations to His Majesty and he instructed me to take up the matter with the Foreign Minister. I explained to Prince Lobanov-Rostovski that I had come to an oral agreement with Li Hung Chang regarding the provisions of a secret Russo-Chinese pact, and that the only thing left now was to embody the agreement in a formal written instrument.

When the text of the treaty came back to me, I discovered, to my great surprise, a substantial alteration in the paragraph dealing with the Russo-Chinese union against Japan. The words par le Japan (by Japan) were missing from the text. In its altered version the pact provided for the mutual defense of the two countries in the event of an attack upon either of them not by Japan alone, but by any other power. I was actually frightened. The alteration was of momentous importance.

I immediately went to see the emperor and laid the matter before him. He instructed me to ask Prince Lobanov-Rostovski to make the necessary correction in the text of the agreement. The situation was very delicate. I was much younger than the Foreign Minister and much below him in official rank. For me to correct what he had done was to affront him and arouse him against me. I made known my apprehensions to His Majesty and asked him personally to take up the matter with the prince. He agreed. Soon afterward we all went to Moscow to attend the solemnities of the coronation.

Finally, we set the day for the signing of the secret agreement, the signatories on the Russian side being Prince Lobanov-Rostovski and myself, and on the Chinese side Li Hung Chang, who had received instructions directly from Peking. Prince Lobanov-Rostovski opened the session and declared that both sides were familiar with the text of the agreement, that the instrument had now been carefully copied by the secretaries and that it could be signed without reading. Nevertheless, he said, he was perfectly willing to let the Chinese re-read the document, if they so wished. Accordingly a copy of the agreement—the document was to be signed in duplicate—was handed to Li Hung Chang's assistants. I took the other one and began to scan it, suspecting no evil. Suddenly, to my horror, I noticed that the paragraph relating to our defensive alliance with China had not been changed, notwithstanding His Majesty's assurance, and that, unlike my version, it provided for an obligation on our part to defend China from an attack by any power.

PRINCE'S FINESSE.

I approached Prince Lobanov-Rostovski, called him aside and whispered in his ear that the provision regarding the defensive alliance had not been changed in accordance with His Majesty's will. "My God!" he exclaimed, striking his forehead, "I clear forgot to tell my secretary to insert that paragraph in its original wording." Nevertheless, he was not in the least taken aback. He looked at his watch. It was a quarter past twelve. He clapped several times to call the servants and said, turning to the gathering: "It is past noon. Let's take luncheon. We will sign the agreement afterwards."

We all went to have luncheon, except the two secretaries, who, while we were lunching, copied the document and made the necessary corrections. These new copies were quietly substituted for the ones which had been circulated before luncheon and were duly signed by Li Hung Chang, on one side, and by Prince Lobanov-Rostovski and myself, on the other.

The agreement was an act of the highest importance. Had we faithfully observed it, we would have been spared the disgrace of the Japanese War and we would have secured a firm foothold in the Far East. Anticipating upon the course of events, I may say here that we ourselves broke the agreement and brought about the situation which we are now facing in the Far East. It was an act in which treachery and giddy-headedness were curiously mingled.

THE HELPING HAND.

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

Several thousand children in Ruthenia, homeless and without proper food and clothing, are receiving aid through the Junior Red Cross of America. An orphanage in the Munkacevo district has been placed in charge of two trained American women workers sent there by the Junior Red Cross. Under their direction the orphanage has been made habitable and bedding and furniture installed to supplant that which had to be destroyed. Homeless children who cannot be cared for in the already overcrowded orphanage are being placed in the homes of peasants and every possible step has been taken to provide for them through the winter. The Junior Red Cross has appropriated $10,000 for this work and the American Red Cross has shipped ten cars of clothing to Munkacevo to be distributed among the needy by the representatives of the Junior Red Cross. The children are rapidly responding to kindness, good food and cleanliness and most of them will be given some schooling during the winter months.

In order to assure adequate fire protection at all times to the village of East Marion, Long Island, the wives and sweethearts of the local fire laddies have volunteered their services ot the department. The action was taken at a recent meeting of the firemen, on which occasion they had invited the women of the village. The majority of the East Marion men folk are fishermen by occupation and their duties take them away from the village about four days a week. The menace of fire during their absence was discussed, and the women volunteered to act in their places. This offer was accepted enthusiastically by the firemen.

"God, I need some coal, and you know it," was the intensely practical prayer which Maj. Collins of the Volunteers of America made Monday night as he surveyed his empty coal house and his equally empty purse. Early Tuesday morning his prayer had an answer in the form of a phone call from E. M. Poston of the New York Coal Company, saying that he was putting a carload of coal at the disposal of Maj. Collins for the poor and sick of the city.—[Columbus Dispatch.

Improved provision for the comfort of invalids and cripples is one form of current progress that probably owes its impetus to the great war. The old-fashioned wheel chair, laboriously hand-pushed, seems likely at last to become obsolete, as modern propulsive methods are adapted to the new purpose, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine. In a recently designed outfit, the wheel chair takes the form of a sidecar on a light steel frame which may be attached in a few minutes by four bolts to a standard bicycle of either diamond or drop-frame style. Spring suspension and deep upholstery make the side seat comfortable.

One of the great needs of Montenegro has been trade and vocational schools. To aid in remedying this situation, the Junior Red Cross of America has appropriated $15,000, which will be used in aiding in the erection at Podgoritza of a modern vocational training high school building. It will serve as the model for the extension of the system throughout the country.

Perhaps the most quickly written hymn was "From Greenland's Icy Mountains," which was composed by Bishop Heber in little more than fifteen minutes.

An authority on the subject says the sound of cannonading can be heard much farther than that of thunder. The limit of the carrying power of thunder is about fifteen miles, while twice that number of miles is not regarded as any great distance for the sounds of battle to travel.

In China newspapers are sold two and three times over. Collectors go about the city gathering up the newspapers of the previous day's issue, redistributing them among the lower class population. They are then further distributed by being sent out to the villages and country districts, where they are sold at a fraction of their original price.

There are other fish with this accomplishment in the Himalayas which have no such apparatus, but which make their way against the current and up steep waterways, adhering to the rocks by their smooth ventral skin and enlarged lips.

The January Underwear at Bullock's has been supplemented by new shipments which should give buying another vigorous spurt, tomorrow---Monday---is the opinion of the Whities---and there are reasons why—are among the new things—every bit as good, if not better than those which created so much enthusiasm earlier in the month. There will be over 300 of them for Monday. Eleven styles—lace trimmed and plain tailored in fine quality Crepe de Chine —too good to miss. Sizes 36 to 44.

Crepe de Chine Chemise $2.95

—Another cause for freshened interest will be

Crepe de Chine Gowns

—36 of them should go quickly at this price—3 styles in sizes 15, 16 and 17. They are all very pretty—some embroidered, others lace trimmed slipover style included—exceptionally fine gowns at $3.95.

Cotton Bloomers $1.50

—are not to be underestimated, either—Brocaded Cotton Bloomers—all pink—length 25, 27 and 29 inches—elastic at waist and knees—reinforced. The kind that sold rapidly early in this month-long underwear event at Bullock's.

Muslin Underwear

will include Muslin Drawers at 65c to $1.50 and the Whities consider them unusual. Also Muslin Corset Covers at $1.25 and $1.50 equally important in value. And Muslin Envelope Chemise and Gowns at $1.00 to $3.45 hold opportunity of which many women are taking advantage. Windsor Crepe Chemise at $1.75 have been proclaimed exceptional values by more than one who knows.

Philippine Underwear

—You should take the hint of the Whities and be on hand early Monday to see the new things which will be available in Bullock's Great January Underwear Event—Fourth Floor.

Would you believe that

Shetland Wool Sweaters

could be so pretty and new and still be

Priced at $9.75 each

if you were not told? Even the Whities were inclined to doubt each other, and no wonder.

—My, but they are trim and smart—and practical, too. Just the right weight for these cool mornings and evenings. Close, firm weave, ribbed effect.

—Convertible Tuxedo collar and belt that crosses in front. Plain colors of brown, tan, navy, heather, white, beige and china blue. Wouldn't they be delightful worn with a plaid or white skirt?

—And $9.75 is their price—a special price—for Monday—this Whitie day of values—at Bullock's—Fourth Floor.

Did You Ever

stumble across such a fascinating group of

Beaded Bags at $5.45

—Real imported beaded bags? The Whities doubt it, and not without reasons.

—Examine them very closely. If you have done so with other bags of higher price you will recognize a quality superior to $5.45.

—But if you step away and admire the colorings—the designs of flowers and conventional motifs—you will be just as completely satisfied that these are 25 unusual Beaded Bags to find so low priced as $5.45 each.

—At Bullock's, Monday—First Floor.

INTERESTING

"They're from France, of course," declared the Whities, displaying some real hand-knit Beaded Bags in the most delightful of the new Spring shades, and much of the gray that has become so popular. They are leather lined mostly, though some are lined with silk. They close with a drawstring. "Cretonne patterns are worked out," the Whities explain, "and you know how popular cretonne organdie dresses are going to be."

"ONE O'CLOCK SATURDAYS"

"Fact is, the cretonne pattern is going to be used everywhere, most unexpectedly. We saw it in coats as well as dresses. So these purses of beads worked in cretonne patterns just fit into the Spring Fashion scheme—as their makers intended that they should. They are to be in the Purse Section—First Floor—priced $34.50, with war tax of $2.75."

"ONE O'CLOCK SATURDAYS"

"Styles for Little Children?" answer the WHITIES to our tentative question. "Why, certainly, their Spring clothes are arriving at Bullock's every day.

"ONE O'CLOCK SATURDAYS"

"The New Romper Dresses are about the cutest things we ever saw, and they are priced so reasonably, too, at $5.00. One group is of crepe trimmed with organdie and the other of corduroy, yarn stitched. They look like dresses, but they are rompers, just the same. Fourth Floor."

"ONE O'CLOCK SATURDAYS"

"Have We Found Books?" asked the WHITIES. "Well, we didn't bring in new ones, but we took those we had and marked a whole lot of them away down. Prices are from 25c to $1.00 on several tables of Miscellaneous Books. Second Floor."

"ONE O'CLOCK SATURDAYS"

"Have You Seen the new Chantilly laces that have just arrived?" asked the WHITIES. "Then you surely will enjoy them, for they are some of the most beautiful we have ever found. Prices are from $1.00 to $12.00; the length is 36 inches. Second Floor."

Men! $1.35

will buy one of the finest

New Neckties

that you have seen for a long time—Monday at Bullock's Men's Store.

—They have just been unpacked. They really deserve a more prominent mention than this, but the Whities thought them so good that space was made for them at the last minute.

—Splendid new patterns and colorings—the medium shape which is so popular and stylish now. A big new lot of them, which should remind many a man of days gone by at such a low price as $1.35 each—Monday at Bullock's Men's Store—First Floor.

The Seamstress

On Housekeeping vs. Boarding.

My land! Ain't it something auful to just live? I ain't meaning but what most folks somehow manage it all right in the end, but you know how it is. Ma'm? Oh no'm, I don't mean me. I got accustomed to living the best I can, me and Lonny, adapting ourselves to whatever comes along and trying to laugh the trouble part of it to death.

Yes'm, I don't blame you at all. It certainly is hard to keep house what with rents agoing up all the time and the furnace to take care of and moving your furniture and gitting it stove up and coal out of sight and nobudy to cut your grass and being hard to git hold of the garbage man and the neighbor's chickens apestering like everything and being afraid at night when you are left by yourself and gitting your washing done and—Ma'm? Well I was just trying to think how much you had to put up with if you have to housekeep. It's mighty hard on you I know.

Ma'm? Ah yes'm, I have all them things too, only I've got used to 'em and it seems like it makes it harder for me to stand if I complain of 'em though it helps somebudy else to speak of it, I think it is all right, yes'm.

Yes'm, I know there's the trouble of getting somebudy to clean too, and keeping up the repairs or always being after the landlord what you most ingenerally have to push and poke and beg and fuss at and then there's the taxes and the plummers and the making garden, having the chimneys cleaned in the fall or be burnt out when the furnace starts and having to stay at home to be there when folks is going to deliver things or else a bothering the neighbors and having 'em complain that it is a heap of trouble to take care of your packages and parcels and being at home on the butter-man's day and the day the man comes for the laundry when you have to give himyour husband's collars to do and then having to be there the day he comes back—

Ma'm? No'm, when you got all them things to attend to it looks like to me that it is nothin' short of wonderful that women have time to do any sewing or tending to meetings like what you do. But then you can buy a heap of things ready-made. It ain't so much trouble as having me in the house to get lunch for and have me always a chatterin' away like a magpie and— Ma'm? Oh, thank you. I am glad if I can be of any use or comfort to you. And I think that you can make the prettiest kind of dress out of that suit of yours, it was real light in weight and it don't make no difference how much of a coat it is, its tricotine and we can sew the coat to the skirt kind of long-waisted and lap it over in front so that you won't have to have a vest exactly, only a front and collar. Well and then you can have a little embroidery put on it at the machine place and I reckon it will save you about $30—

Ma'm? Oh, yes'm, I reckon I am good for something. I got to make use of the material the Lord put into me, you know. But we was talking about housekeeping, well if you take it on the other hand and try renting a room or boarding, well My Land! They ain't nothing worse.

Well one time me and Lonny (that's my husband) thought we would like to rent a room and board with a friend or eat out.

Well, we moved our furniture there as much as we could get into the room and then we stored the rest and together it was right expensive.

Well, the friend was all right, but pretty soon she got nervous about me wanting to wash out a few things there and she didn't want to have nobudy move nothing in the laundry. Course I was as neat as a pin if I do say it myself Well, and then she couldn't hardly stand me getting up early enough to go to my sewing account she didn't sleep very well at night and had to rest in the morning.

Well, then Lonny was auful put out the way the bathroom wasn't never clean and I didn't alwalys have time to run and clean it after everybody went in and didn't wipe out the bathroom tub like I always do after I take a bath.

Well, about two months after we got there and moved our furniture in she thought we wouldn't like to move and so raised on us.

Well, then we looked for other places. And we moved here and them ontel we couldn't stand it no longer. Theys a heop of trouble about your own house but a heap more in somebody else's.

Ma'm? Why at one place they kept cats and they was alwaly slipping in the room and gitting onto my bed and making the spread black and clawing holes in it. And another they fussed about us burning so much light and another where we plum froze because we couldn't control the heat like in our own house and they was another what wouldn't let us come in late nor git up early and another where they was mean about the telephone and another where they was the smell of cabbage all the time or else that tacky smell what you smell in some folks house and another what was on a auful tacky street and the neighbors come out and called each other and jawed at their children all the time and another where they didn't have hot water all the time and if you had a pain in the dead of night either you had to go down to the kitchen and heat the water and make your pain worse whilst you was stirrin around (Ain't it funny how some folks hate to spend that maney for a little bit of gas blaze what is such comfort.) And then they was another what didn't take no ice and the water was always warm in the middle of the summer. And another where it made 'em mad to answer the front door.

Well, they was regulations about this and some about that ontel we felt like we was going from one prison to another. And then they was another place what had too many folks for the bathroom. Yes'm you better keep your house.

Tetrazzini, the famous singer, declares that eight is her unlucky number and that in traveling she always is careful to avoid berths or hotel rooms with that number.

Girls make just as good stock raisers as men, according to Josephine Garden, 14-year-old grammar school student of Wapello, Iowa, who amazed experienced stock breeders at the International Stock Show here when her entries carried off prizes in two events.

Josephine, owner of a stock farm with nine head on it, has been caring for stock three years, and believes it is a good business for a young woman. In the three years she has been running her farm Miss Garden has won many prizes, one of them being the grand championship for Shorthorn steers at the Iowa State Fair in 1918.

The Times Literary Page Books and Their Makers

By Thomas F. and Lillian C. Ford

H. G. WELLS INTERPRETS HISTORY.

British Novelist Advocates the Unification of the World Into One Community of Knowledge and Will, Based on the Brotherhood of Man.

"THE OUTLINE OF HISTORY, BEING A PLAIN HISTORY OF LIFE AND MANKIND." By H. G. Wells. Written with the advice and editorial help of Ernest Barker, Sir H. H. Johnston, Sir E. Ray Lankester and Prof. Gilbert Murray. Illustrated by J. F. Horrabin. Two volumes. The Macmillan Company, New York.

Your novelist is your only history maker. Mr. Wells, having taken a peek at the Martians, now takes all knowledge as his province and writes a history of mankind from its beginning as a sprawling something where the tides of another day "spread and receded over the steaming beaches of mud and sand" to the Peace Conference and the making or unmaking of a new Europe.

One can but wonder at the vast industry of Mr. Wells. During the last twenty years he has exemplified his skill in many ways, chiefly in the field of fiction. Of the vast amount of research work involved only the few can judge. But of the assembled whole he who runs can assay and weigh. Mr. Wells has put flesh on the bare ribs of history and infused life into dry facts. He has made history stand upright and use its own legs.

He has approached his subject with a freshness of mind, an independence of judgment and an assurance of ability to handle it that could not fail to produce an exhilarating and stimulating book.

In the beginning let it be noted that this "outline" is not so innocent as it may appear, though the author describes it as "a plain history of life and mankind." It is an interpretation of history, first and foremost, the interpreter being Mr. Wells, who aims to present history according to his conception of life and society.

In every period and in every great series of events Mr. Wells sees the proof of his own theories, and, with such restraint as he can exert, strives impartially to present the facts. That impartiality is not always possible for him, dominated as he is by his beliefs and his principles, few will deny.

We see him undertake the colossal task of writing such a universal history, not for fame and not for gain, but in order to bring man to his way of thinking. Propaganda? Yes, in a sense, but what a stimulating and even justifiable sense.

He has no respect for anyone's prejudices but his own; long-accepted creeds and principles he sweeps away with a wave of his pen; before his clear vision our sacred heroes, our cherished tales of patriotism and valor, the rock foundations of all our modern life crumble and vanish.

Religion, education, politics, national ideals, fundamental conceptions of worth and right, all are subjected to his acid test, and perish or endure by this. And the test? It is this: "What has this or that done to bring mankind into a unified whole?"

Internationalism, founded on the brotherhood of man, is the dream of Mr. Wells, more dear to him than any of his contributory socialistic theories. The last chapter of the second volume expresses the message in its title, which is, "The possible unification of the world into one community of knowledge and will."

In the course of this last chapter Mr. Wells says: "Our true state, this state that is already beginning, this state to which every man owes his utmost political effort, must be now the nascent federal world state to which human necessities point. Our true nationality is mankind. men. Nationalism as a god must follow the tribal gods to limbo. Our true nationality is mankind. . . . Sooner or later that unity must come or else plainly men must perish by their own inventions."

As to how soon or how late this is to be accomplished he does not attempt to say, except to suggest that "The way may be very long and tedious, very tragic and wearisome, a martyrdom of many generations, or it may be traveled over almost swiftly in the course of a generation or so."

His unified world is to be unified in religion as well as in all other phases of life. Nowhere is the refreshing quality of Mr. Wells more apparent than in his comments on religion. For instance, he says that Gautama's work was "beyond all dispute the achievement of one of the most penetrating intelligences the world has ever known," and that "in the gospels all that body of theological assertion which constitutes Christianity finds little support." Of Paul's part in the making of Christianity he says: "He found the Nazarenes with a spirit and hope, and he left them Christians with the beginning of a creed."

Plainly he strives for impartiality in the study of Christianity, declaring that "The audience to which this book will first be presented will be largely an audience of Christians, with perhaps a sprinkling of Jewish readers, and the former at least will regard Jesus of Nazareth as being much more than a human teacher, and his appearance in the world not as a natural event in history, but as something of a supernatural sort of interrupting and changing that steady development of life toward a common consciousness and a common will, which we have hitherto been tracing in this book. But these persuasions, dominant as they are in Europe and America, are nevertheless not the persuasions of all men or the great majority of mankind, and we are writing this outline of the story of life with as complete an avoidance of controversial matter as may be. We are trying to write as if this book was to be read as much by Hindus or Moslems or Buddhists as by Americans and Western Europeans. We

A TRUE FRIEND.

A book I find a constant friend
  That manners does not lack,
For though we chance to disagree
  It never answers back.
It does not rant and saw the air,
  Or lay the law down flat,
But quietly it states its case,
  And lets it go at that.

Neglected though it lies around
  For months, or maybe years,
The same old friend when opened up
  It instantly appears.
It offers me the best advice
  The sages ever penned.
It shows me how to live my life,
  And how my ways to mend.

AS SEEN BY THE NURSES.

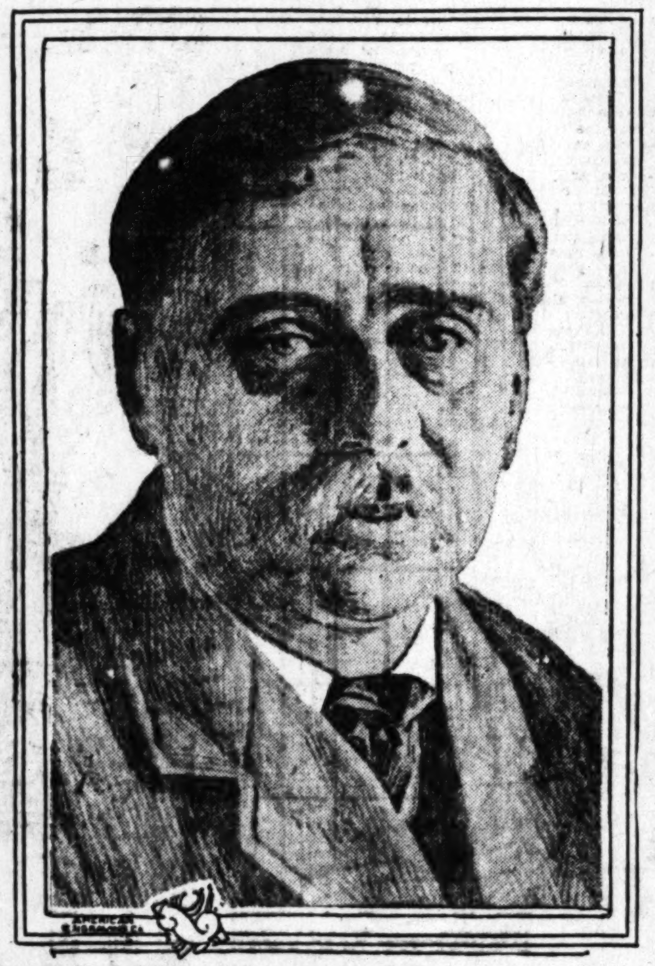
WARD TALES. By E. C. Davies. The John Lane Company, New York.

A book of sketches and stories of V. A. D. work, in which the author reveals life as seen by the nurses and staff of a British war hospital and as it appeared to the Tommies sent there for treatment. With insight and humor Miss Davies recreates the atmosphere and outlook of the military hospital and brings before us an interesting group representing various types. Nurses, doctors and men who served and suffered at the front will like this book for its veracity and keenness of observation as well as for its literary quality.

The book is a member of the "On Active Service Series," the purpose of which is to bring together a collection of war narratives, by eyewitnesses in the great war, of typical experiences at the front, and also other accounts of specially dramatic or historical interest. The publishers believe that as Europe settles slowly into the new order, the war will appear more and more extraordinary in its gigantic perspective and astounding range. The very men who now wish to forget it will be interested in narratives which recall to their memories the strange atmosphere of 1914-1918, and multitudes will turn with curiosity to genuine chronicles of those amazing years.

The series includes the following books: "Sapper Dorothy Lawrence: The Only English Woman Soldier;" "Temporary Crusaders," by Cecil Sommers; "Dover During the Dark Days," by A Dug-Out (Lieut.-Commander Stanley-Coxon;) "A Handful of Ausseys," by C. Hampton Thorpe, with a foreword by Gen. W. R. Birdwood and an introductory poem by the Poet Laureate, Robert Bridges; "The Boys with the Guns," by the late Lieut. G. W. Taylor, edited by his sister, Mrs. Roger Cookson, with an introduction by Sir James Crichton-Browne; "Three Chevrons," by Maj. H. F. Bidder, D.S.O. ("Orex;") "Pushing Water," by Lieut. Eric P. Dawson, R.N.V.R.; "Some Soldiers and Little Mamma," by Helen Boulnois; "Field Ambulance Sketches," by "A Corporal;" "Four Months in Italy in War Time," by Beatrice Thompson; "Ward Tales," by E. Chivers Davies; "With the Chinks," by Lieut. Daryl Klein; "Behind Boche Bars," by E. Warburton, and "The Silence of Col. Bramble," by Andre Maurois.

Apostle of Internationalism.



H. G. Wells, Author of "The Outline of History."

CLASSIC IN ILLUMINATED EDITION.

"THE SCARLET LETTER." By Nathaniel Hawthorne. Illustrated by Hugh Thomson; George H. Doran Company, New York.

Even unto the last, the "Charles Lamb of illustration," as Austin Dodson so felicitously called Hugh Thomson, did not lose his cunning. Master of black and white and of many other media, Thomson left a name to reckon with among the illustrators. This book, his last—Thomson's death occurred only some few short months ago—is the cap-sheaf to a life of solid achievements.

Thomson first attracted marked attention with his illustrations to the "Cranford" and "Highways and Byways" series. Since then books illustrated by him have been much sought after by collectors and artists alike. He is a master of the vignette; he can tell a tale in little in Bewick-like fashion. But over and above all he has charm. For instance, what could be more charming than the illustrations to the various volumes of the "Cranford" series, to "The Vicar of Wakefield" and "Our Village," for instance, or to "Pride and Prejudice," with its intertwining of peacock feathers with other baubles as a cover motif?

Mr. Thomson tried his hand at two other American books before illustrating the present one. I refer to "Aftermath" and "A Kentucky Cardinal," by James Lane Allen. Perhaps he does not quite catch the American touch. Perhaps the Puritan folk in "The Scarlet Letter" are too much the English of his "Days with Sir Roger de Coverley" phase, the architecture too much a warming over of recollections from his "Highways and Byways" days. I, for one, would quarrel with him for making Little Pearl too elf-like, though Hawthorne himself describes her in these hyphenated words. But it is presumption to quarrel with either the author of a great book or with one who has made that book relive through the magic of line and color.

POEM OF PROTEST.

THE LYNCHING BEE AND OTHER POEMS. By William Ellery Leonard. B. W. Huebsch, New York.

Mr. Leonard, known to the few as the poet who rendered Lucretius into blank verse with rare insight and poetic beauty and known to the readers of the radical press as a poet of passionate protest against existing evils, has here produced a group of arresting poems that even the most phlegmatic reader must find vital and stirring.

The poet looks upon American life and sees its lapses, its injustice, its cruelty, its shameful wrongs and its falling away from the true spirit of the land, and makes his protest, his appeal to the national and individual conscience in lines seldom surpassed for vividness of imagery, intensity of feeling, and a haunting quality that it is impossible to describe.

There are six divisions of the book, numbering in all less than 100 pages. The first division, entitled "By Fire and Rope," has three poems, all passionate of mob rule.

The first of these, "The Lynching Bee," is a poetic outburst which shows the horror, the cruelty, the bestiality of negro lynching.

With a realism that cuts into the consciousness and compels attention Mr. Leonard describes a typical lynching from the gathering of the mob to the last shrieks of the tortured victim. Nothing but quotation can convey any idea of the power with which the poet handles his theme:

"They stop—they jerk—they chug—they back.
And in a monstrous ring they park,
With ghostly cones converging from the dark
Upon a central tree all split and black,
Whose limbs and leaves are cavernous out of sight
In the eternity of night!
It's like a magic circle where
Snake dancers, striped, brown and bare,
With pouch to twang and horns on hair,
In old times swayed and swung
And called on Tunga-Tung,
With nasal and guttural unk
Around a lightning blasted trunk,
Or hissed in chorus with a serpent stare:
Yet nothing like this there—
It's only the town of the town's,
And cross-road cottonwood by Farmer Brown's.

It's only twelve true men in pants and coats
(The sort who pay their bills and cast their votes,
Or file in jury-boxes on hot afternoons)—
Each with a finger on a trigger,
Dragging by ropes round his gullet tied,
With hobbled legs and arms well lashed to side,
The best of all buffoons—
A banjo boy and jigger,
A novel-doorway bawler of coarse tunes,
Like Caliban he shuffles, only bigger,
Or orang-outang, only larger-eyed—
A handy-legged nigger,
Quite jerky, but all silent down inside."

It is all there in its ghastly details—the rope, the chain, the mutilation, the tar, the laying of the fire and the approval of the "mother" to apply the torch, the burning, the eyes, the shrieks, the ghouls who seek in the ashes relics of the deed.

Anything so horrible could not be poetry except for the genius of the poet who leaves with the reader the sure conviction that only by control of passion and the submission of personal injury to law can man, white or black, hope to escape the beast.

The editorial comment of the publishers truly states that, "like Wilde's 'Ballad of Reading Gaol' and Hood's 'Song of the Spirit,' the 'Lynching Bee' is written in the fire of indignation over social wrong. Mr. Leonard uses colloquial language and striking rhythms in the effective manner that caused Hood's poems to be chanted on street corners and printed on pocket handkerchiefs. The poetry of one generation crystallizes into the law of the next. There is a definite relation between Wilde's poems and prison reform, between Hood's poems and humane laws for women workers. The intensity of Elizabeth Browning's 'Bitter Cry of the Children' inheres in this, the first genuine poem to picture the negro in contemporary America."

Other poems there are in this small book, poems of protest and discord that many will find too extreme for their taste. But those who admit that one function of poetry is, as an instrument of social revolt, to arouse and awaken the soul of man, must also admit that Mr. Leonard has the power to do this.

PHILOSOPHICAL ESSAYS.

WALKING STICK PAPERS. By Robert Cortes Holliday. George H. Doran Company, New York.

BROOME STREET STRAWS. By Robert Cortes Holliday. New York.

These two volumes of delightfully whimsical essays have just been issued in what the publishers are pleased to call a library edition, bound in boards and illustrated by Jack Duncan.

The first essay in the volume, entitled "Walking Stick Papers," under the caption "On Carrying a Cane," is a little classic in its way, shot through with solid information, delightfully imparted, that at once arouses the interest of the most pronounced roughneck on the subject of "canes."

The interest in the essay entitled "That Reviewer 'Cuss,'" strange to say—is not confined to that little group of worthies who eke out an existence by reviewing books, but has a strong appeal to all who read books, for in it we get a glimpse behind the scenes of the publishing game.

The companion book, "Broome Street Straws," is remarkable for three good pieces of work: "Tarkingtonapolis," which is really an analytical and appreciative review of Booth Tarkington's book, "The Magnificent Ambersons;" the essay entitled "The Pub," which is Class A reading, even in these dry days, and "The Amazing Failure of O. Henry," in which Mr. Holliday gently, but firmly, and with a keen and incisive sympathy, places the work of that remarkable writer in its proper relation to modern literature. He says: "Indeed, his pieces not only attentively describe some of them but are even beautifully and artistically carved. Why is it that they have so little relief? The short story as O. Henry conceived it and molded it is essentially an artificial thing, it turns on a juggler's trick, it is like the ingenious game of shell, it depends for its effect on the 'kick' at the end."

RECENT FICTION.

MAINWARING. By Maurice Hewlett. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.

The story of a man who was a charlatan with a touch of genius, a labor leader who betrayed the men that trusted and elevated him, a man who "could drive men like sheep down steep places into the sea." When first introduced by the man who tells his story, Mainwaring was "a tall, gaunt, starved and distraught young man, outrageously thin, with cheek-bones like knives and elbows like hedge-stakes," sometimes hungry and at others dining luxuriously at cafes, always determined "to make good" in some spectacular way, sure of his own powers, or, as he expressed it, "I have got it in me, d'ye see. There's a furnace roaring in me guts."

Five years later he attracted attention by leading a mob in an original foray on the police, and, barely out of jail, fomented a miners' strike which he won by clever leadership. This secured for him a seat in Parliament as a Labor member, along with the undying trust and devotion of British workingmen. In the meantime he had found time to marry the incomparable scullery maid, Lizzy, of whom he said: "Her father is a carter and her mother does charring and laundrywork. Yes, sir, and Lizzy was on her knees at the doorstep when I first saw her." She was, according to him, the most beautiful woman on earth since the Venus of Milo's time. "You'll be reminded of that goddess when you see Lizzy."

But all this did not prevent his carrying on quite openly a love affair with a countess, whom he bullied and neglected and persecuted as the mood dictated.

Then he betrayed Labor, playing his own hand in a shrewd game, which advanced him almost into the Cabinet. When the Venus-like Lizzy refused to follow him up the dizzy heights, doggedly insisting upon being true to her own class, faithful to her own standards, he sardonically accepted the situation, rather enjoying its outcome. In the end he emulated Samson in pulling the house down over his own head in order to wreak vengeance on those he hated and most of all upon the one woman he had loved.

The book is a remarkable study of a man without moral principles or ideals, contrasted by being set off against the staunch Lizzy, one of those elemental women as virtuous as a cabbage and as true as steel.

The artistry of the book is unquestioned. Mr. Hewlett has never written with greater verisimilitude. The characters live and impress themselves upon the memory; the atmosphere is distinctive; the book one to be read and remembered.

MAC OF PLACID. By T. Morris Longstreth. The Century Company, New York.

A story out of the ordinary in setting and in characters. We are told by the publishers that "Mac of Placid" is a thrilling love story set amid the snows and pine forests of the Adirondack mountain country. The action takes place at a time when the Adirondack region was settled almost entirely by loggers, hunters and trappers, a few farmers and a handful of men and women seeking relief in its pure air from the great white plague. It is as full of action, color, and vigor as the most robust western novel, but it has in addition a richness and variety of appeal that few novels of the last ten years have offered.

We do not find the love story more thrilling than the average, though a first-class movie villain attempts to win the conventional pretty heroine from the stalwart hero, and is frustrated at every turn, as he should be. Action there is of a kind, hand-to-hand conflicts, popularly designated as fights being almost too plentiful. But of course robust fiction of the robust variety needs a few fistic encounters to keep the interest up.

Robert Louis Stevenson is one of the characters of the book. It is a fact that he spent some time at Lake Placid in search of health, and there is no doubt that Mr. Longstreth has gathered much first-hand information of the sayings and doings of R. L. S. while there. But that hardly warrants him in evolving long conversations between Mr. Stevenson and his hero, in which words are put in the mouth of the former that he never said and probably never thought. The point is that writers who take liberty with historical characters more often misrepresent them than not. A character known to fame may be introduced into a work of fiction providing he is so skillfully handled as to give the reader no perverted or misleading ideas of his life or character. Lincoln has suffered much in this respect, numerous authors having attempted to describe him with such detail as to present a very clearly drawn picture of a country bumpkin or of something else equally remote from the real Lincoln.

As a story with an unusual setting, giving certain phases of life in remote country places, "Mac of Placid" is well up to the average; as an attempt to present Robert Louis Stevenson it is not so satisfactory. Biography is the vehicle through which lovers of this great romanticist prefer to gain an intimate knowledge of Stevenson, and most of them will probably view with indifference or distaste his appearance as a character in this novel.

A SHEAF OF BOOKS IN GENE

"LIMBO," By Aldous Huxley; George H. Doran Company, New York.

Mr. Huxley is the author of "Leda; and Other Poems." He is also young and has been well treated by the reviewers. Some call him a prose ironist; others bestow on him the sort of negative appellation of a cheerful pessimist. All, or most of them, praise. That he has affinities with Hubert Crackenthorpe and the Yellow Book school has not, I believe, been before pointed out. There is the same concern in these tales as with Crackenthorpe, in the minor, more sordid tragedies of life. Lust and degeneracy play their part in large in many of them, under the usual disguise—at least as regards the second—of concern with other things. 'Tis the Yellow Book style. They are not pretty tales. But this again prompts the question: why should they be pretty?

"A STUDY OF POETRY." By Bliss Perry, Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston and New York.

Mr. Perry discusses "The Poet's Imagination," "Verbal Images," "Imagist Verse" and what not in this present volume, which is a scholarly addition, interestingly written, to the small shelf of books that tell the what and why of poetry. He tells of the part that the lyric plays in modern life, of its use on the musical comedy stage, and of its degradation by those who never take the trouble to attune their ears to meter. If you think such discussions inane or uninteresting, just get Prof. Perry's book and learn what a real scholar and competent literary worker can do with a recondite theme.

"TALKS TO WRITERS," By Lafcadio Hearn; Dodd, Mead & Company, New York.

paragraphs that follow does this as well as he is he leaves no doubt of his on that odd system Christian theology.

as elsewhere our historian mindful of his purpose, his own theological theory might be dubbed. To him it is Jesus's social and po- teachings, as construed by went. Note this: "And did Jesus strike at patriot- the bonds of family loyalty of God's universal fath- the brotherhood of all but it is clear that His condemned all the grada- the economic system, all wealth and personal ad- their possessions belong dom; the righteous life the only righteous life, vice of God's will with had, with all that we again and again He de- private riches and the res- great religion he declares been founded by the begin- war—an "unsports- thing," he says, reference being to the mud walls that Mohammed constructed about Medina to await the coming of his former Meccan fellow-townsmen "and a man," he continues, "whose spiritual concepts became as naught in his later years, due to the development of "a disagreeably strong interest in women."

As history is a progress, he rightly devotes much space to its latest stage, the period of the great war and of the making of the peace.

"The catastrophe of 1914," as Mr. Wells calls it, is still too near us for judicious weighing of men and events. But he does not lack assurance. He says that "the professional military mind is by necessity an inferior and unimaginative mind; no man of high intellectual quality would willingly imprison his gifts in such a calling." He then points out that the great soldiers have been either inexperienced, fresh-minded young men like Alexander, Napoleon and Foch, politicians turned soldiers like Julius Caesar, or amateurs like Cromwell and Washington. Credit to those who won the great war is therefore grudgingly given by him. As he sees it the whole great war was a mob scene, with the people as sorry pawns in a game of incompetents.

Nor does his tale of incompetency end there. Discussing the Peace Conference he says: "The conclusion of the great war can be seen most easily as the rise of the American President, President Wilson, to predominant importance in the world's hopes and attention, and his failure to justify that predominance." Continuing he says of President Wilson that "there is no evidence that he had at any time in his life made a general study of the world problem outside the very peculiar and exceptional American case. He was mentally the new thing in history, negligent of and rather ignorant of the older things out of which his new world has risen."

What a pity that Mr. Wells did not write this book to instruct Mr. Wilson in time. And yet there be those who would have raised objections to this, as being a case of the blind leading the blind. Be it understood that Mr. Wells's horror over the "failure" of President Wilson and of the Peace Conference is due to the fact that nationalism, instead of internationalism, prevailed. "The League of the Covenant of 1919," he exclaims, "was, in fact, a league of 'representatives' of foreign offices, and it did not even abolish the nonsense of embassies at every capital." To speak as though the whole world were in accord as to the desirability of such abolition is simply petulant childishness, as Mr. Wells very well knows.

Again he breaks out: "It was a complete recognition of the inalienable sovereignty of states, and a repudiation of the idea of an overriding commonweal of mankind." Does he fondly imagine that this is why the American Senate was opposed to it? And does he think that either his own country or ours would have accepted any covenant that did not recognize "the inalienable sovereignty" of each?

And yet it is for this reason that President Wilson is taken from his pedestal, stripped of his honors, and rolled in the mud. And Mr. Wells never even takes the trouble to try to show that either Mr. Wilson or any other leader of America ever has subscribed to the peculiar type of Utopia our author demands.

But though we may become impatient at his too extreme internationalism and at the injustice he displays toward great leaders who do not believe as he does, we nevertheless are vastly in his debt for the handling of the league and other topics fearlessly, dramatically, and with that humor not unmixed with irony so generously accorded him.

As to the lack of balance and proportion in the allotment of space to the different epochs of history, that is apparent to all who read this "Outline," much might be said. For instance, Mr. Wells gives Lincoln just enough space to record the date of his birth and death and to say that "he rose to greatness," while he devotes six pages to Croesus, over thirty to Alexander, seven or eight to Julius Caesar, and about the same space to one Yuan Chwang, who catches his imagination.

His treatment of Napoleon, whose coronation he designates as the most extraordinary revival of stale history that it is possible to imagine," is as racy as it is biased. He says that during the unstable ascendency of France, "the outlines on the map of Europe waved about like garments on a clothesline on a windy day," but fails to rejoice over this, as an internationalist should.

Of Napoleon's marriage he remarks: "He might have been the maker of a new world, he preferred to be the son-in-law of the old." He condemns Napoleon for disregarding the spirit of nationality in Spain, where logically he should praise him for this "international" spirit.

Comments on this brilliant book might be made until doomsday without exhausting its possibilities. Enough has been said to show its character, and incidentally its unsuitability for the purpose intended by the author—that of a text-book for schools.

And yet, of all the books published in the past decade give me "The Education of Henry Adams" and "The Outline of History."

The People and Their Daily Troubles

Motor Cars Cause of Unsightly Figures, Says Famous Actress.

BY JANE DIXON.

There is absolutely no reason in the world why any one should allow fat to run away with his or her figure.

This is the edict of Miss Jobynn Howland.

If you do not know Miss Howland, you have not seen that excruciatingly funny bit of stage froth, "The Gold Diggers."

Nor have you made the acquaintance of Mabel, the perennial chorus lady, who is Miss Howland at her funniest.

Mabel realizes if she is to continue obfuscating the "buyers" out front she must retain her sylphlike figure. So Mabel exercises—joyfully—like a victim paying a wisdom tooth visit to the dentist.

Over the teacups and the cinnamon toast the Miss Howland version of Mabel explained how she keeps tall and slender and willowy.

The tall part of the equation is fairly easy, being a matter of heritage. But the slender and willowy parts—well, unless you have tried them yourself you cannot remotely appreciate their difficulties.

THEN SHE STARTS WALKING.

"I stand six feet minus my French heels," admitted Miss Howland. "My weight is 158 pounds, which is fair enough considering the length over which it extends. Whenever I catch myself well along in the hundred and sixties I take myself in hand, pull up, cut down the menu to fighting strength and start walking.

"Motor cars are responsible for more tonnage than any one luxury, excepting only foolish foods. Women have formed the habit of being trundled about on rubber tires to an extent where many of them are tired out after they have negotiated two blocks. I fell into the trap myself.

"But when I discovered myself beginning to billow comfortably over the back seat, I forced myself to walk all afternoon, shopping, going here and there on business, and just covering distance for exercise. At 5 o'clock, when I was well tired, I took a ride and really enjoyed it.

"Eventually I disposed of the car because I found it too much of a temptation.

"What most women fail to take into account is the fact that once they have acquired superfluous flesh it is a real task to rid themselves of it. If, when they notice the pounds creeping up, they will take themselves in hand the trouble can be checked with ease and dispatch. Most of us wait until we are a hopeless case, then we rush into all sorts of heroic cures in a desperate attempt to regain our figures."

"Have you ever been forced to adopt desperate measures?" I inquired, feeling certain the answer would be a clean negative. The clever comedienne of the brilliant Belasco success is so like those lithesome creatures of the fashion pages, so vivacious and quick of wit and restive, that one could never picture her in terms of avoirdupois.

QUESTION AMUSES HER.

My question seemed to amuse her. She ran her long, nervous fingers through her tawny crown of hair, crinkled the corners of her frank blue eyes into a map of mirth and appealed to her friend, Miss Zoe Akin, the playlady, who was pouring the tea.

"Shall I tell?" she asked.

"Confess," advised the playlady.

"I once weighed 190 pounds." There was almost a shudder in the sentence. It was easy to read these were fearsome words, even in memory.

"How did you subtract the thirty?" I begged, knowing well many a rotund citizen would rise and call me blessed did I but spill the secret.

"I ate and grew thin," was the ready reply.

Here it is again, that old bugaboo, diet.

"Do not lose hope," continued Miss Howland. "This is no starvation party. It merely is a matter of eating nonfattening foods. I never have adhered to a strict diet. White bread is off my list. I never touch it. Potatoes are on the list rarely. I never indulge in sauces, such as cream sauce or butter. My food is cooked plain, so that I may enjoy its natural flavors.

"For example, I never have fresh vegetables cooked with butter. The very thought of fried food is repugnant to me. Sometimes I have a fancy for sweets. If I am watching the scales at the time, I finish my dinner with a single piece of chocolate candy instead of a pastry, pudding or cream. This satisfies my appetite for sweets and is neither so indigestible nor so fattening as the average rich dessert.

DOES NOT LUNCH.

"For breakfast I take gluten toast and a glass of milk. In the theater we work at night, so I arise late. This means I do not lunch. There is enough nutriment in the milk and toast to carry me until dinner. After the theater my regular supper is milk toast.

"Others about me are eating every sort of epicurean concoction, but I remain true to my milk toast. It strengthens me and has a soothing influence, conducive to sound sleep. Whenever I wish to take off weight, I omit the milk toast and retire without supper. This enables me to lose five pounds in a couple of weeks."

Jobyna, the irresistibly funny, turned serious. She leaned forward, will o' the wisps from the wood fire tangling themselves in the ruddy cloud of her hair.

"Please say for me," she said, "that if I grow to weigh four hundred pounds net I will never be guilty of reducing by means of medicines. I value health too highly to gamble with it. I met a friend who had tried a much touted reducing remedy the other day. I wanted to ask her where she had spent those twenty years since I saw her last summer. She had taken off twenty pounds and added twenty years.

"My advice to anyone wishing to reduce is to make haste slowly. Do not try starving yourself. You will ruin your digestion, and once your stomach is gone you are done for. Go about your diet slowly, cutting off a fat producer here and one there, until you accustom yourself to the change without too much clamor from your appetite.

"A really fleshy person should not expect to begin to lose weight for at least two months after starting on the 'eat and grow thin' method, plus reasonable exercise. Once the beginning is made the remainder of the task is easy."

RUNS WILD IN MOUNTAINS.

Jobyna "Mabel" spoke joyously of her summers spent in a picturesque country home in the foothills of the Berkshires.

"Up there," says she, "I run wild. I wear overalls from spring until autumn. Digging in the garden, mowing lawns, pottering with plants, flowers and shrubbery, picnics on mountain tops are my favorite pastimes. The people around about wouldn't know me if they saw me dressed up to represent one of those trailing super-elegant ladies under whose guise I have invaded the theater until Mabel came along."

Miss Howland rose impulsively to her feet. In a New York apartment she towered. Her long arm swept out to capture a marmalade sandwich.

"But why worry about weight?" she asked. "It is a matter of self-determination. So long as we are healthy, we have our work, our friends, our ambitions and accomplishments; who cares for a pound of flesh, more or less?"

Question: I understand that the senior Senator accompanies and introduces a new Senator when he is sworn in. Who performs this office for Representatives? B. A. T.

Answer: Since all Representatives are elected for two years only, the entire membership of the House has to be sworn in at the beginning of a new session. The oldest member of the House administers the oath to the Speaker of the House, who then administers the oath to groups of members, the groups usually composed of one or more State delegations. In case of a member elected to fill an unexpired term, the new Representative is usually introduced by a member of his State delegation.

Q.: Is the number of deaths in railroad accidents growing smaller, or does it only seem so in comparison with fatalities caused by automobiles? M. R. S.

A.: The Interstate Commerce Commission says that in 1919, 6978 persons were killed in railroad accidents, this being the lowest death record since 1898.

Q.: What is the longest road in the world? W. A. T.

A.: The Lincoln Highway may well be styled the longest road in the world. It crosses twelve States, connecting New York with San Francisco as directly as possible, consistent with the topography of the country.

Q.: How many people are drawing Spanish-American War pensions?

A.: The Pension Bureau says that the number of pensioners of the Spanish-American War on the rolls now is 22,814.

LETTERS TO "THE TIMES."

Is It Brain or Brawn?

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 13.—[To the Editor of The Times:] A few days ago a debating team from Princeton came out here to debate with Occidental. The event attracted a little attention, a few heard the debate and a modest write-up was carried in most of the newspapers. Just a day or two afterward a bunch of football players came from Ohio and San Francisco, representing two other colleges—then the world went wild.

Thousands of persons packed the grand stand, days before the even the papers were filled with "dope" and pictures of the players held the center of the pages of all the papers of this and other sections of the country. In other words they were real heroes. We, as a people, have said to the young man in college, "If you want praise and comment, popularity and fame don't go in for studious things like discussing great and weighty questions, don't fool your time away like that. Get a place on the football team—don't develop your brain, build up your muscles."

Is it any wonder that many of our young men come from our universities today knowing less of the real things that count in life than our fathers did who never saw beyond the confines of the little red schoolhouse? Until we pay as much tribute to the man of brains as the man of brawn we are going to have a short crop of really worth-while young men. B. L. ABBOTT.

New Year Suggestion.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 3.—[To the Editor of The Times:] A new year has just begun and may I as an old-time reader and admirer of The Times suggest that you resolve to give us a little taste of what The Times used to be during the year 1921.

Please, oh, please, cut out a lot of your blood and thunder, divorce and scandal. The efforts you have recently put forth on the Peete case are not worthy the dignified position you have always held. Let the police officers attend to the details of these bloody crimes and you put your reporters to work on things that spell construction. Just because a few of the loud-mouth kind are greatly interested in the minute details of murder don't insult the great body of your readers by putting them in that class. Your paper built up a great reputation by letting the little yellow dogs dig up the filth and I am sure you will continue to grow greater if you overlook some of the details.

Please, oh, please, don't print Mrs. Peete's picture again. We have all seen enough of her and we don't care a rap about whether she came from Texas or any other place. Tell real big news of the the police and deputy muck-raking.

SALE OF 1921 SPRING SILKS
A Sensation—A Sacrific—A Saving
Prices So Low They May Never Be Duplicated

The panic of the recent past in the silk market dropped prices down to the lowest level ever known for manufactured silks. During that panic this business was born. We purchased for spot cash more than one hundred thousand dollars worth of silks at prices enabling us to offer the most wanted weaves and colors at one-half and as little as one-third former selling prices. It was sensational and caused a stampede of expectant shoppers to the Quality Shop.

Business increased by leaps and bounds and our store became the busiest shop in Los Angeles and has continued so ever since the opening day. Our buyer is now in New York and reports that silk prices are advancing and the market becoming more firm. Prices will be much higher and it is doubtful if you will ever be able to buy silks again at the low prices prevailing at present. Our advice is to buy silks now and buy liberally.

Those which they deem sweet, clever and wholesome, and funny without being risque, will be announced each week from the club platform, as the ones the mothers may safely send their children to see. Those that are regarded as injurious by the committee will not be mentioned. Thus a constructive work will be done, rather than destructive."

After the report of Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, chairman of legislation, the board took action indorsing the Smith-Towner Educational Bill and the Sheppard-Towner Maternity Bill. Mrs. Exley, representing the district, will send telegrams to Washington at the psychological moment urging their passage. The Welty bill, which is an immigration bill, was not indorsed, but it was urged that a careful study be made to find its virtues and defects.

It was decided to increase the issue of monthly bulletins, which is proving valuable to all the members of the district, and another important decision was to have a big mass meeting of all the clubs in the district for the benefit of the European relief fund. This meeting will be Friday, the 28th inst., at 2:30 p.m. in the Ebell clubhouse, with Dr. Lulu Peters, recently returned from Albania and Serbia, as the chief pleader for the starving children of Europe, for whom a drive is now being made throughout the country.

Reciprocity days of the near future were announced: January 21, Lamanda Park Woman's Club; January 25, Cosmos Club; January 31, Los Angeles Travel Club; February, 2, California Badger; February 11, Ramona Woman's Club; February 17, South Side Ebell; February 18, Echo Park Mothers' Club, and February 22, La Camarada.

Matinee Musical Club.

It will be a new venture for the Matinee Musical Club when the members present Edith Lillian Clark, pianist, and Amon Dorsey Cain in joint recital on the 27th inst., at 11 a.m., in the ballroom of the Alexandria. The program will include "Honor and Arms" (Handel,) "The Blind Ploughman" (Robert Clark,) "Calf of Gold" (Gounod) and "Visione Veneziana" (Brogi,) "Andante Spianato" and "Grand Polonaise Brilliante" (Chopin,) "Largo al Factotum" (Rossini,) "Lotus Land" (Cyril Scott,) "Dance Negre" (Cyril Scott,) "Irish Tune" (Percy Grainger,) Concert Etude op. 36 (MacDowell,) "Lungi Dal Caro Bene" (Secchi," "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen" (Burleigh,) "A Golden Thought" (Gertrude Ross,) "The Wreck of the Julie Plante" (O'Hara,) "Hark, Hark the Lark" (Schubert-Liszt) and Concert Etude D-flat (Liszt.)

Mrs. Amon Dorsey Cain will be her husband's accompanist.

The next regular meeting of the club will be on Thursday at 1:30 o'clock at the Ebell Clubhouse. The program will be in charge of the drama section, of which Miss Eleanor Magnuson has recently taken the curatorship.

Lillian Burkhart Goldsmith will give two short plays. She will be assisted by members of the club.

The guests of honor for that day will be the members of the Morosco and Wilkes stock companies. Following the program will be an informal reception and tea will be poured in the patio.

Philanthropy and Civics.

"What was Accomplished in My Club During My Term of Office" is the subject of a symposium to be given at the regular meeting of the Philanthropy and Civics Club on Tuesday at the Elks' Clubrooms after the luncheon, which begins at 1 p.m. This club has in its personnel many presidents and past-presidents of prominent women's clubs in the district. Several of them have consented to join in the discussion and in the presentation of plans for club work. They are:

Mrs. Sidney Thomas Exley of the Los Angeles district, Mrs. H. T. Wright, the Woman's Club of Hollywood; Mrs. Kate Crane Gartz, Altadena Woman's Circle; Mrs. W. W. Slayden, Highland Park Ebell; Mrs. M. S. Anderson, Matinee Musical Club; Mrs. F. W. Fuller and Mrs. Berenice A. Johnson, Wednesday Morning Club; Mrs. Clarence Van Graham, Wednesday Afternoon Club of Alhambra; Mrs. Allene Tweedy, Downey Woman's Club; Mrs. Frank Parent, Inglewood Woman's Club; Mrs. Oscar Trippet, Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra; Mrs. Maire Reed Towne, Badger Club; Mrs C. E. Noble, Parent-Teachers' Association; Miss Grace Stoemer, Native Daughters; Mrs. Fank J. Wagner, Santa Monica Woman's Club; Mrs. Arnold Burkelman, Catholic Woman's Club; Mrs. E. M. Lazard, Council of Jewish Women; Miss Carrie Cahill, Saturday Afternoon Club of Banning, and Mrs. Grant Goucher president of the Southern California Childs' Welfare Association.

West Ebell.

That during the past 2000 years the passage of the globe through a section of slow vibratory movement of the magnetic currents caused the obtuse perceptions of the Dark Ages, was the statement of Mrs. Emma J. Reid of Long Beach in her address before the West Ebell Club at the last meeting when she spoke on "The New Age."

"Now," she said, "we are entering a section where the vibratory currents are vastly more rapid; hence a greater enlightenment, a keener understanding of nature and nature's laws." Mrs. Reid connected her theory with the achievements of men and women of these latter days and with the rapid progress in invention and science.

Mrs. Adna W. Vance sang Cadman's "Sky Blue Water" and "I Hid My Love in a Rose."

For the meeting on Tuesday Miss Rena Cathcart will speak on conditions in Mexico and there will be music given by the Synthetic School.

Shakespeare Club.

An American Woman's Club in far-off China, its affairs, its accomplishments and its personnel, were brought vividly before the Shakespeare Club of Pasadena at the last meeting, Wednesday, when Mrs. John Sawyer, who is a member of the club in Shanghai, told how her club had become an international blender uniting in its social work the women of different nationalities who make up the composite citizenship of the foreign city.

In all the projects undertaken, said Mrs. Sawyer, the different nationalities look to the American woman and through this organization they are leading continually in a remarkable way. The club in Shanghai has been a member of the General Federation of Women's Clubs since 1902 and thus keeps in touch with the woman's movement in the United States. Shanghai has extended an invitation through the American Woman's Club to the General Federation for the next biennial convention.

Mrs. Frederick A. Dow, past president of the Illinois Federation, was the other luncheon speaker. She spoke on "thrift."

Miss Louise P. Merritt, chairman of art and travel, introduced Mrs. Bannell Sawyer, who brought from her home in Rome many pictures which in her talk she happily connected with personal memories of the city of art.

At the meeting this week, on Tuesday, Barrie's "The Twelve Pound Look" will be the play for the drama section's consideration with Miss Louise Crawford leading in the morning at 11 o'clock. "Legends and Songs of Ancient and Modern Chaldea" will be the subject of Prince Raphael Emmanuel, son of a high priest in Chaldea, at 2:30 p.m.

Audubon Society.

Mrs. G. H. Schneider was the speaker for the Los Angeles Audubon Society meeting last Thursday in the State Building at Exposition Park. Her subject was "The Distribution and Migration of North American Birds," which she introduced from the Pilgrim's standpoint, quoting from the diary of Gen. Bradford of Boston's Plymouth Colony under date of March 3, 1621, which is considered the first reference to song birds in American history.

The different routes of the feathered travelers were traced on a hand-made map executed especially for the society by Don McLain, expert draftsman and recently a forest ranger. Dr. John Comstock, assistant curator of Southwest Museum, talked on the Indian welfare work of the State and explained the pending legislation that threatens the well-being of California Indians.

Cosmos Club.

Baroness Ottillie De Ropp was the honored guest and speaker at the luncheon given for the Cosmos Club by the Club Building Association in the Ebell clubhouse last Tuesday. The baroness spoke on "Russian Theaters," emphasizing the love that Russians in all walks of life have for things artistic and beautiful.

"Russians like all kinds of amusements notwithstanding their reputation for somberness," said the baroness. "Their preference is the theater and members of families are known to hold the same seats for years." That stock companies are more prevalent than traveling theatrical organizations, that each regiment of the army has its own stock company with the female parts enacted by men, that a certain number of seats are always set aside for school children, with the prices of cinema plays ranging from 3 cents to $1 a seat, were further statements of the speaker in her interesting contrast of the American theater with the Russian.

The Los Angeles High School Glee Club, led by Miss Sallie Mason, sang a group of four songs and Miss N. Hyness gave a half-hour talk on interior decorating, bringing out the values of dimensions for proportion and color scheme. The 25th inst. has been assigned by the club as reciprocity day when guests from all over the district will be invited.

Verse Writers' Club.

The Verse Writers' Club has changed its headquarters from the Trinity Auditorium Building to room 805 Brack Shops, where the next meeting will be held Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

Wednesday Afternoon Club.

The Wednesday Afternoon Club of Alhambra held its weekly meeting at the clubhouse the 12th inst. Dr. George Cole, a librarian, gave an interesting talk on the Huntington library.

Reciprocity Club.

"The Church in the New Social Order" will be the subject presented to the Reciprocity Club on Wednesday at 12:30 p.m. at a meeting to be held in the Broadway Cafe. The speaker will be Carl Wetheral, who is connected with the Wellesley High School. Mrs. Katherine Pierce Wheat, president of the club, extends an invitation to the public to attend.

Woman's Club of Hollywood.

Lillian Burkhart Goldsmith's annual appearance before the Woman's Club of Hollywood is regarded as one of the season's banner attractions and a large, appreciative audience greeted her Wednesday afternoon. Her lecture-recital, "Messages in Poetry and Prose," included Mylo Jo Closser's "At the Gate" and "From Her Late Residence," by Ruth Comfort Mitchel.

In the morning the Browning Study Section, Mrs. E. C. Gates, chariman studied "Pompilia." The readings were given by Mrs. Caroline T. Owen, Mrs. G. G. Detzer and Mrs. Prescott T. Stevens. At the luncheon hour Mrs. Detzer as chairman of the literature section, presided and introduced Miss Gertrude Darlow and Mrs. M. L. Davidson as guests of honor. Miss Darlow gave an interesting review of current books and Mrs. Davidson discussed "Plays in New York Theaters."

At the meeting next Wednesday the morning will be devoted to the music section with Miss Clara Drais presiding. Robert Louis Stevenson's life and works will be the subject and a group of his poems set to music will be sung by Miss Cora Coolidge of Fitchburg, Mass. At noon, Mrs. Charles H. Richmond will lead in a discussion on "Modern Science—a Solution for Home Problems." Mrs. Lowell C. Frost, who formerly was in charge of the home economics department of the University of California, will tell "How to Save an Hour a Day." Readings from Shakespeare will be given by H. Ellis Reed for the afternoon program, at 2:30 o'clock in the clubhouse.

Business Woman's Club.

At the regular weekly meeting of the Business Woman's Civic Club tomorrow evening in the Rose Room of the Investment Building, Willis Newton will discuss "Peculiarities of School Finance," and Miss Jean Bernard will speak on "Our Responsibility Toward the 'Part Time Child.'"

Last week Dr. Dana W. Bartlett, expert authority on housing, declared 5000 people who could afford to pay for homes are unhoused in Los Angeles. To meet this deficiency, according to the speaker, a change in our ideas of supplying houses must take place. Competitive building having failed, Dr. Dana asserts that the source of a proper supply of homes must be a co-operative or government plan which recognizes housing as a public utility.

The second speaker of the evening, John W. Mitchell of the Municipal Art Commission, deplored the lack of financial support given to the commission, which is regularly organized as a part of the city's working machinery for attainment of the real "City Beautiful." Of the $167,000,000 spent by the city in the last ten years, which amount does not include assessments for street improvements, Mr. Mitchell stated nothing had been expended for artistic ornamentation and that the city does not possess a municipal building that any reputable artist would acknowledge for his own. He contended that rapidity of expansion and increased population do not make a metropolis.

Ohio Society.

At a meeting of the Ohio Society last Tuesday night in the Friday Morning clubhouse Mrs. Ida Eckert Lawrence read from a volume of her own poems, "Day Dreams." Mrs. Lawrence was born in Ohio and comes from a family of Ohio pioneers.

Mrs. Lawrence herself was one of the favorite poets of President McKinley and in response went to Paris where she was a delegate of the American Women Writers' Association at the international congress.

Woman's Club of Riverside.

Two evenings of vaudeville are planned by the Woman's Club of Riverside when a brilliant social function will be held with a benefit for the clubhouse fund. The entertainment will be on the 24th and 25th insts. Lillian Dorothy Barnett, the 7-year-old dancer, will give a Chinese and a Turkish dance.

Woman's City Club.

"The Book of Job—the Greatest Drama in the World," will be interpreted by Lillian Burkhart Goldsmith at the Woman's City Club tomorrow. The meeting will be held at 1 o'clock in Lincoln Hall, in the Walker Auditorium Building. Nonmembers may obtain guest tickets at the door admitting them to the program. Following the program Mrs. R. T. Brain will hold her French class.

Last Tuesday at a luncheon held at the Lafayette Tea Rooms a membership drive was launched, directed by Mrs. John S. Myers, chairman of membership. There are two teams competing for the honor of bringing in the largest number of new members. Team No. 1, captained by Mrs. John T. Coleman, includes Miss Helen Laskey, Mmes. Mary R. Irwin, D. M. Fagge, Rose Riggle, Frederick Hickok, John W. Summerfield, Bertha Studell and Callie J. Shultz. Team No. 2, captained by Mrs. R. T. Brain, includes Mrs. E. McClure, Mrs. Nina Wade, Mrs. J. T. Taylor, Mrs. L. H. Cox, Mrs. D. O'Brien, Dr. Jessie Russell and Mrs. M. E. Jenkins.

The result of the drive will be announced on February 7.

Elysian Heights Club.

Many members of the Elysian Heights Civic Club who did not know the history and present condition of California Mission Indians were enlightened to a great degree by the time Dr. John Comstock, assistant curator of the Southwest Museum, had finished his interesting lecture on that subject last Friday at the museum.

Dr. Comstock proved a cordial host. Following the lecture he conducted the club through the building and gave little talks on the many rare and costly collections of curios that are contained in the museum.

The two wonderful paintings by Gustave Dore, the only ones by that artist in the United States, came in for a large share of the club's interest and admiration.

The business meeting, presided over by the president, Mrs. H. E. Wilkinson, had been held in the morning at Sycamore Grove, and was followed immediately by a basket picnic, in order that the entire afternoon might be spent in the museum.

Dr. Comstock was given a vote of thanks by the club.

HEAR PRIMA DONNA, SEE ETCHING MADE.

Delightful was the program given at the Highland Park Ebell clubhouse January 11, when Miss Naomi Hale sang "Ave Maria," with violin obbligato by Laurence Hubert, a pupil of Hale E. Dewey. Miss Hale is to be prima donna of the W. G. Stewart California Opera Company and is a pupil of Clara Bradley Dawson. Benjamin Chambers Brown gave a talk and demonstration of the making of an etching. He is president of "The Print Makers," an international organization. The British Museum recently purchased six of Mr. Brown's etchings. Next Tuesday Dr. John Comstock, associate director of the Southwest Museum, will speak on the Mission Indians. A description of an archeological trip to Navajo county, Arizona, will be given by Miss Adelaide Chamberlain in costume.

PRESS WOMEN HEAR NEW MANNER LYRICS.

At its shop-talk meeting on Tuesday the Woman's Press Club enjoyed an introduction to a new group of its own poet-members, in a symposium of both published and unpublished work characterized by imagination and artistry. The reading included "A Song of Today," a lyric of true singing quality by Eva Hamilton Young; "A Disturbance in Fairyland," a bit of delightful whimsicality which caught the popular fancy, and two colorful stanzas, "Ragged Robin Rose," by Alice Forsythe; a trinity of subjective, intimately speculative lyrics in the newer manner, "Last Decision," "God Looked Into the Glass" and "My Soul," by Grace Wallace; and from the pen of Dorothy Haddox a group of delicate and lovely fancies: "Called Away to Court," from the sequence, "An Elizabethan Lover," "The Sun Dial," "The Man With the Dancing Dolls," "The Pomegranate Tree," rich in color and imagery, and a short lyric of restrained emotional value, "Then Shall I Die."

FRANCE TO USE CONSCRIPTION.

Two-Year Period of Service is Revived.

Reduction of Enlistments Will be Considerable.

Policy is Defended by Gen. De Castelnau.

[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

PARIS, Dec. 30.—The hope that the end of the war meant an end to the French system of peace-time conscription has been definitely abandoned. The two-year period of service has been revived and will continue in force for twenty-four months; after that men will be drafted for eighteen months.

The decision reached by the Cabinet is a compromise between the views of M. Andre Lefevre, Minister of War, who advocated the two-year system without qualification, and his colleagues, who asked for the immediate reduction to eighteen months.

The army establishment for 1921 is 696,200 men and 38,473 officers. These figures do not include about 20,000 officers and men either employed in the ministries or in North Africa and Syria. The approximate total in army service is 750,000.

LARGER THAN 1914.

This force is considerably larger than it was in 1914. But at that time France had recognized the danger of an attack by Germany and the three-year conscription act of 1913 had been accepted as an inevitable necessity.

What are the conditions now that make the nation accept even a larger force?

They are found in the character of the French bourgeois, represented so completely in President Millerand. The certainty of having something for his old age and for his children; he is convinced that a strong government alone can secure him in his possessions. He is honest, laborious and thrifty and uncompromising to those who do not pay their debts. This uncompromising attitude has been at the basis of French foreign policy. The bourgeois says:

READY FOR FORCE.

"Germany, by the treaty she has signed, agreed to supply coal and to pay money; if she does not pay she must be made to; in order that there will be no possibility of her failing to pay, a strong army must be ready to apply force whenever necessary.

"Russia owes the interest on money lent to her by France; if she does not pay it or acknowledge the debt, she must be made to; therefore France must have an army capable of enforcing the payment of the debt.

"The British penetration in Africa and the Near East would eliminate France as a commercial factor if France were not equally wide awake to her opportunities; in order that France may have something in her old age and for her children, her opportunities must not be neglected; a strong military force is necessary to look after French interests there."

REDUCTION LIKELY.

The bourgeois believes in these policies; he is ready to fight for them and to die for them. Therefore the enlarged conscription system is maintained.

But taking the French army as it stands and as it will continue to stand for two years more, what will be the result when the eighteen-month system of service begins?

The reduction in numbers is likely to be considerable. The yearly contingent of men drafted into service is about 200,000; under the eighteen-month system that will account for 300,000 men. To these must be added the volunteer contingent, probably about 60,000 men, and the officers and non-commissioned officers, making a total of approximately 400,000 for France alone. Then there are the colonial troops—white and black natives—which ought to be about 200,000. The total for 1922 would then be reduced by about 150,000—from 750,000 to 600,000.

DEFENDED BY CASTELNAU.

Even in face of this reduction, the French policy might appear to an outsider as militarism in its most oppressive form. It is defended by Gen. De Castelnau, president of the Army Commission, in words that recall the speeches of 1913. The general says these 600,000 or 750,000 men are needed as "a safe-guard of the honor and independence of the country; the integrity of ancestral territory and legitimate possessions outside of France; the protection of its moral and material interests throughout the world, and, finally, the constant development of social progress in order, in harmony and with respect for the constitutional laws of the country.

MARJORIE DAW IN DRAMATIC PART.

In Marshall Neilan's spectacular picturization of "Bob Hampton of Placer," the Randall Parrish story of 1876, now nearing completion, Marjorie Daw is given the most dramatic part of her career.

This production, it is said, offers Miss Daw an opportunity to duplicate the success of Wesley Barry in his first stellar characterization disclosed in "Dinty." Like young Barry, Miss Daw for nearly two years has been given a careful schooling in every branch of the histrionic art in motion pictures by Mr. Neilan.

In "Bob Hampton of Placer," as the kid—a devil-may-care little will-o'-the-wisp of the West—Miss Daw is given the chief feminine part. The transformation of this care-free child into a woman who becomes involved in a series of tragic events, affords this clever little girl an opportunity to outshine any of her previous achievements before the camera.

SUFFER FROM EXPOSURES.

Rupert Hughes, who is spending all his waking hours just now at the Goldwyn studio co-operating in the screening of his picture, "Dangerous Curve Ahead," has recently caused this director and cameraman to assert that his pictures are "wicked." Hughes's original ideas are often difficult of execution. In "Dangerous Curve Ahead," for instance, some of the scenes called for six exposures. Time was when it was revolutionary to have a double exposure, and they are still very difficult to make. Yet Mr. Hughes blithely asked to have six exposures—and got them, of course.

DON, Dec. 16.—The Balk- have always contained the ingredients for making The Sarajevo explosion shat- Europe. The smoke of de- had hardly cleared away new series of explosions arted. They have been go- for two years, only this time wider territory, as the peace Balkanised the whole ungarian Empire. make a dramatic change in history if the magic of statesmanship could fuse these dangerous chemicals into a solution that insured durable peace.

A beginning of such a solution has now been found in the Little Entente and statesmen are trying to develop it until it becomes a big entente that will make a solid block of the territory from Germany and Switzerland to the Black Sea. If successful, they will have amalgamated ten nations into an alliance that would form a real United States of Europe.

REAL FEAR OF WAR.

The beginning came from a very real fear of war. Hungary, after the downfall of the Bela Kun regime, developed a military strength, in disregard for the stipulations of the Treaty of Trianon, that was regarded as a menace by Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slavia. So the two latter countries formed their defensive alliance, calling it the Little Entente, as a means of protection against Hungary.

The Little Entente insisted that the League of Nations compel Hungary to reduce its forces to the 35,000 permitted by the Trianon Treaty, but, although a formal order was given to Hungary, its army has been maintained on a large scale. The lack of effort in the League's orders has forced the smaller nations to seek alliances with each other to maintain the territories allotted to them at the peace conference.

DEFINITE AGREEMENT.

Rumania, Greece, and Jugo-Slavia have reached a definite agreement for the maintenance of the Treaty of Neuilly. By this treaty Bulgaria lost territory to the three first named nations and she is seeking to have the treaty reformed. Greece and Jugo-Slavia have a political-economic treaty that runs until 1923.

With four nations—Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia, Rumania and Greece—bound by treaty, the Rumanian statesman, Take Jonescu, took up an idea that had been conceived in Paris in 1918, in conversations he had with representatives of the other three nations—Benes, Pachitch and Venizelos—and suggested that they organize a big Little Entente, with the four nations united in a mutual defensive alliance. He further suggested that Poland be invited to join.

TO HOLD HUNGARY.

The combination of these five powers would make a ring around Hungary, so that she would be helpless in any militaristic adventure.

The difficulty of Poland being included, of course, has been the enmity that exists between Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. When the Allies granted half of the city of Teschen to Czecho-Slovakia, the Seya (Polish Parliament) officially announced its unwillingness to abide by the decision. Czecho-Slovakia has since been fearing that Poland will attempt another Vilna coup and send an army to occupy the city.

Another disadvantage of a little entente alliance with Poland lies in the expectancy of the downfall of the soviet government. If a new Russian government comes into power, it is expected that it will renounce the Treaty of Riga and insist that Poland go back to her original borders. The little entente would then have to join Poland against Russia. But Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slavia are normally Russian sympathizers. Especially in Jugo-Slavia, the Pan-Slav propaganda of the old Russian regime had effect; neither nation would run the risk of being embroiled with Russia.

What Poland would really prefer is a strong alliance with Hungary and Rumania. But Rumania's alliances against Hungary make this out of the question.

POLAND APPROVES.

Poland, therefore, has officially indicated her approval of M. Jonescu's big little entente. If the Rumanian statesman succeeds in reconciling the differences between Poland and Czecho-Slovakia and getting them into one alliance, he will have a solid basis upon which to form the big entente.

Bulgaria, through its Prime Minister, M. Stamboliski, is already clamoring for admission, but the war hatred of the Jugo-Slavs makes it impossible to give her immediate admission. Ruthenia, which is nominally an independent nation under the control of Czecho-Slovakia, would, of course, be included, as would Albania.

AUSTRIA WEAKEST.

The last nations to be admitted would be Austria and Hungary and they would apply for admission only through the force of necessity.

Austria, which dominated the whole situation up to 1918, now stands as the weakest of all the new nations. Her German population, of course, wants to be allied to Germany. With the Allies' veto on this plan, she stands at the mercy of Jugo-Slavia and Czecho-Slovakia. The Jugo-Slavs have already shown their attitude by occupying Carinthia after the plebiscite in which 60 per cent of the population voted to remain part of Austria. Czecho-Slovakia is in repeated conflict with Austria. Nevertheless Prague and Vienna are mutually dependent.

HUNGARY NOT POPULAR.

Hungar would probably be the last state admitted to the big entente, as the whole entente idea has had its inception in fear of Hungarian militarism. A complete change of temper is needed before she can be received.

Another Balkan explosion may send the whole thing sky high. But if the scheme is realized, more will have been accomplished for the peace of Europe than was by the Paris peace plan of the President and the premiers.

MAY ROBSON'S RETURN.

Will Come to Mason Tomorrow in New Play by Alan Dale.

True to her promise to bring each year a new play to Los Angeles, May Robson, the charming and ever-welcome comedienne, will, tomorrow night, for a week's engagement be presented at the Mason to local theatergoers in her newest and most captivating comedy success, "Nobody's Fool," written expressly for her by the well-known dramatic critic and author, Alan Dale, and produced by Augustus Pitou, Inc., under whose direction Miss Robson has appeared for the past several years.

Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Pitou has in the past always secured for his talented star, the dramatization of some well-read book, such as "Tish," "The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary," "A Little Bit Old-fashioned," etc., it was his intention to offer her this season in something different from anything she has ever been seen in.

Mr. Dale, while reviewing her play last season in New York, suggested to Mr. Pitou that he had a scenario of a play which he had had in mind for Miss Robson a couple of years ago, but had never been able to have it put before her properly. Mr. Pitou made an engagement with Mr. Dale to read the idea to Miss Robson and himself after the Saturday matinee, with the result that he was commissioned to write the play, which is a modern comedy in three acts and four scenes.

Miss Robson has been surrounded by a most excellent cast of players it is said, and the management has been lavish in mounting the play.

SKINNER AS HAJJ.

"Kismet" Continues to Flicker at Tally's Broadway.

Otis Skinner, greatest of American character actors, makes his screen debut in "Kismet," which is smashing all records at Tally's Broadway this week.

This star, having created the principal role in "Kismet," that of Hajj, the rascally old beggar of Bagdad, and played it many times upon the stage, is pleased to believe his screen interpretation to be the greatest he has made, and he also declares this is the last time he will ever play the role.

For years Otis Skinner was averse to appearing in motion pictures. His work, he claimed, was for the legitimate stage alone, and while many stars of the spoken drama changed their affections to the film, Mr. Skinner remained steadfast. Finally, when he was convinced that a screen version of "Kismet" would serve to perpetuate this play, of which he was so fond, as well as his own art, he consented to revive Hajj and give the story to the world at large through the medium of motion pictures.

"While I do not think the screen will ever supersede the stage," remarked Mr. Skinner, last summer while making this picture in Hollywood, "I firmly believe that the next few years will see many of the most prominent stage players giving their talents to the camera."

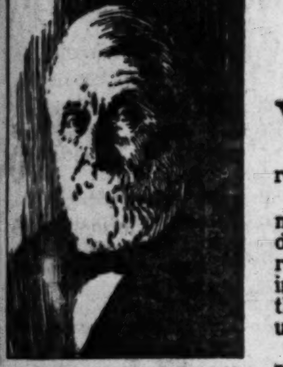
COLLEEN MOORE CANCELS HER TRIP.

Colleen Moore has been forced to cancel her scheduled trip to New York. She had planned to leave next Wednesday on a combined business and pleasure trip, but the doctor who recently operated on her for tonsilitis forbade her going East.

Miss Moore is awaiting Marshall Neilan's return from the East. Two producers are seeking to borrow her for the feature role in their productions, but no decision can be given until Mr. Neilan returns, checks up his production schedule, and decides whether or not she will have time to do a picture before he starts work with her.

Lives to See the Prescription He Wrote in 1892 the Worlds Most Popular Laxative Remedy

Founder of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, the largest selling liquid laxative in the world, long past Biblical old age, but hale and hearty—Still sees patients daily—Wonderful achievement of a "country doctor."



DR. W. B CALDWELL TODAY
Born Shelbyville, Mo., March 27, 1839
Began the manufacture of his famous prescription in 1892

WHEN I started to practice medicine, back in 1875, there were no pills or tablets or salt waters for the relief of constipation, and no artificial remedies made from coal tar.

The prescription for constipation that I used early in my practice, and which I put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid remedy, and I have never had reason to change it. I intended it for women, children and elderly people, and these need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

I am gratified to say that under successful management my prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that over eight million bottles were sold by druggists last year proves that it has won the confidence of mothers whose chief interest is the health of their children.

It is particularly pleasing to me to know that the biggest half of those eight million bottles were bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for grownups. The price of a bottle holding 50 average treatments is sixty cents; such a bottle will last a family several months.

I have never made a secret of what is in Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a compound of Egyptian Senna and other simple laxative herbs with pepsin and pleasant-tasting aromatics. These ingredients are endorsed in the U. S. Pharmacopoeia. I consider Syrup Pepsin today in the serious 82nd year of my age, as I did in 1892, the best remedy a family can have in the house for the safe relief of constipation and its accompanying ills, such as headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and I believe if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy for emergencies.

TRY IT FREE Send me your name and address and I will send you a free trial bottle of my Syrup Pepsin. Address me Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 513 Washington Street, Monticello, Illinois. Everybody now and then needs a laxative, and it is well to know the best. Write me today.

MISSION PLAYERS HAVE GALA PARTY.

CELEBRATE THE SIXTEEN HUNDREDTH TIME OF PERFORMANCE.

To celebrate the 1600th performance of "The Mission Play" at the Old Mission Playhouse, at San Gabriel, the players and the author, John Steven McGroarty, and those associated with the enterprise, enjoyed an informal party on the stage between the afternoon and evening performances last Wednesday.

There was a supper of "hot dogs," chile beans, doughnuts and steaming coffee, served in regular cafeteria style by Mrs. McGroarty. The gathering was picturesque, the Indians in their blankets, the dancing girls in their red slippers, and Patia Power entirely out of her role of the Senora Yerba, and very much her fascinating self.

After the "eats," Chief Cajeta of the Pueblo Santa Clara, N. M., whooped a real war whoop and danced a war dance, tomahawk and all. Harold Ostrom sang some rollicking darky melodies, as did the male quartet of "The Mission Play."

Mr. McGroarty presented a beautiful bouquet to Miss Jane Rupple, who has played the role of Anita at every one of the 1600 performances. Frederick Warde told of his happiness in the role of Junipero Serra, and Mr. McGroarty recalled some of his early struggles in putting on the play.

At the conclusion of the festivities, Father Torrente of San Gabriel Mission, asked a blessing on the play and players, and called Mr. McGroarty "the greatest missionary of them all."

COMMUNITY PLAYS IN SECOND WEEK.

The Hollywood Community Theater is to play its program of one-act productions for a second week. These include "X Equals O," by John Drinkwater; "Lonesome-like," by Harold Brighouse; "Q," by Stephen Leacock, and "Salome" in pantomime.

"Salome," presented and directed by Marion Morgan, is perhaps the chief attraction with its gorgeous setting and group of celebrated dancers. As the curtain rises a stage picture of remarkable beauty is revealed, and with the entrance of Josephine McLean as Salome, the action becomes charged with hypnotic fatality. Charles Dudley portrays John the Baptist, Betty Blythe is a majestic Herodias, Ramon Zerrico is effective as Herod and Edgar Hansen, as a slave, gives a potent interpretation.

"X Equals O" is having its first American presentation. The series of colorful sets designed by Milton Monroe have attracted much notice. The players are Philip Hubbard, Clark Marshall, Vesey O'Devoren and Dana Todd.

"Q," by Stephen Leacock, with Thomas Chatterton, William Austin and Joyce Percey, provides a cheerful interlude. Mr. Austin gives an eccentric characterization.

"Lonesome-like" is a story with human appeal and rugged humor. Francis Hawks, Helenita Lieberg, Helen Jerome Eddy and Harold Minger appear.

"BLACKBIRDS."

Unusual Crook Photoplay at Clune's Broadway Theater.

Justine Johnstone, famous Follies beauty and former Broadway idol, makes her bow as a film star at Clune's Broadway today. She will appear in "Blackbirds," an exciting and unusual crook play, with a decided heart throb.

It is not a story of slum life, but of thieving and smuggling by the wealthy, who move in good society, often suspected, but rarely detected. It is a story of two clever thieves of opposite gangs who both go after the same booty, meet and fall in love. How they escape the band of detectives who have cornered them furnishes a thrill that will not soon be forgotten.

If one likes tense drama, then "Blackbirds" will prove fascinating, for it is different. It has many gorgeous scenes and a novel twist to the denouement that is said to almost take one's breath away.

Tricks of the smuggler's wily trade are amusingly shown in one scene and the heroine's return from a trip and delivery of her smuggled booty to the chief of the gang is said to be one of the most interesting scenes of the picture. To tell all the details of this fast-moving crook plan would be unfair to any who may want to see the picture, but it is a corking battle of wits and a tense drama of love and regeneration.

The picture is an adaptation of the stage play by the late Harry James Smith.

LAXATIVE for Aged People

THE BANE of old age is constipation. The bowels become weak and unable to perform their functions without aid. For this purpose only the mildest and gentlest laxative should be used. The use of harsh cathartics aggravates the trouble and makes the constipation worse. Chamberlain's Tablets are a favorite with people of middle age and older on account of their gentle action.

LADY ASTOR IS PARTY HOSTESS.

Dozen German Women Among London Gathering.

Spain Mecca for English Winter Tourists.

British Capital Living in State of Feverish Gaiety.

BY LADY MARY.

[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, Dec. 30.—Lady Astor, M.P., has been giving a series of political parties recently. Among the most interesting was a gathering, chiefly of women, at which "our Nancy" was hostess in her beautiful St. James' Square mansion. In other times, before British women secured the vote, these ladies would have been called suffragettes. Nowadays, we just speak of them as the Women's Party.

At any rate, among the number of these "advanced" numbers of the fair sex, were about a dozen German women! They did not seem to circulate much, and although everybody was very polite to them, there was a certain amount of frostiness in the intercourse between the Teutons and the Anglo-Saxons.

I heard one of these German dames telling Lady Astor that there are thirty-two women who are members of the present Reichstag, and that they represent all parties in Germany. This number (thirty-two) shows a deficit on the thirty-eight women who were members of the Reichstag during the previous administration.

TOURISTS TURN TO SPAIN.

Talking about those who seek new countries and new scenes, reminds me that this winter season, Spain seems to be the most popular and fashionable pleasure ground for English people who desire change of air and a warmer climate. Algeciras is apparently a specially favored resort; there the weather seems to be always balmy and beautiful, and the gaiety of the town unceasing. Also the lure of the tables is very great, and many people prefer those at the Algeciras Casino to those at Monte Carlo.

LONDON FEVERISHLY GAY.

Londoners are living in a state of feverish gaiety. Dancing never seems to cease; we have even been smitten by the lunch-dance fever. I am told that many private lunch-dances are taking place and having great success. So far, I have not attended any of these functions, for, like many other people, I find dancing with tea, dinner and supper quite sufficient amusement when taken in company with an occasional theater, concert or musical party. I do not think that fancy dress balls are so prevalent this winter as they were a year ago. People have rather tired of "dressing up," and really so many extraordinary and fantastic gowns are seen at all the balls and dances that one cannot imagine any necessity for their elaboration.

HONEYMOON OVER.

Constance Talmadge Returns to Duties at Studio.

Constance Talmadge and her company returned to New York from Miami, Fla., where they have been taking exterior scenes for her new picture, "The Man from Toronto," Douglas Murray's play, which has been adapted for the screen by Grant Carpenter. The title will probably be changed.

Constance stopped production long enough to dash over to Greenwich, Ct., in company with Dorothy Gish, where the wedding of the two stars was held.

But Connie couldn't be spared from the studio for long, as the supporting company in "The Man from Toronto" was awaiting her return. Picturization of the interiors started last Monday. Connie cut short her honeymoon with her husband and returned to her studio to receive the attentions of her "reel" Romeo, Kenneth Harlan, who played opposite her in "Dangerous Business" and is again striving for her affections in the present picture. Chet Withey, who formerly made Norma Talmadge's features, is directing Constance for the first time.

It is expected that "The Man from Toronto" will be completed within three weeks, when Constance will begin the picturization of "The Butterfly in Harness," by Frederick and Fanny Hatton.

In the cast are George Fawcett, James Morrison, Flora Finch, W. R. Webb and Florence Short.

THREE CAMERAS WILL FILM "UNFOLDMENT."

In the forthcoming Florence Lawrence production, "The Unfoldment," created by George H. Kern and staged by the Producers' Pictures Corporation, three cameras will picture each scene, it is announced. One will be equipped with a new French imported lens, to obtain exceptional color photography, artistic lightings and soft focus effects, while the other cameras will record the usual sharp black and white photograph. Each scene will be shot with various shades of lighting effect. Twelve full and complete negatives of the finished product will be developed, with special attention paid to the foreign market, it is said.

Kern expects to use more than 300,000 feet of negative in securing the exceptional camera work. Murdock McQuarrie, who will codirect with Kern, will give his attention to the individual players in their acting, while Kern will devote his entire time to the narrative features and photography.

The great success of "Way Down East" and "The Last of the Mohicans" is due to their artistic photography.

William Conklin, the well-known leading man, will play the principal role opposite Miss Lawrence, while Albert Prisco, who just finished with Mary Pickford, also has an important part.

LEAD IN WESTERNS.

Louise Lorraine, the dainty little leading woman of Century comedies and who was well liked in the principal feminine role in Elmo Lincoln's recent serial production, "The Flaming Disk," is now at Universal City, playing opposite Jack Perrin in his current series of two-reel western drama. Edward Laemmle is directing these tabloid thrillers, the latest of which is entitled "The Trigger Trail."

Priscilla Dean,
Star of "Outside the Law," which is continuing its run of popularity.

REAL DETAIL WORK IN "OUTSIDE LAW."

Having had the O.K. of America's most noted detective on the script, many of the scenes filmed in the actual localities in San Francisco's slums, "Outside the Law," now playing its third week at the Superba Theater, offer an authentic picture of crime life in its western hotbed.

William J. Burns was present during the filming of part of Tod Browning's picture at Universal City. He examined the scenario with much interest, offering several suggestions which were gladly accepted by the author-producer. Mr. Burns also coached Lon Chaney in some tricks and "holds" used by denizens of the underworld.

Although four blocks of Frisco's Chinatown were built at Universal City at a cost of $90,000, Tod Browning took his star, Priscilla Dean, and Lon Chaney, Wheeler Oakman, Ralph Lewis and E. A. Warren to San Francisco to shoot scenes in other parts of Chinatown, along the water front, and on board a tug in the bay.

PROWESS OF SIR BOSS, TRANSPLANTED YANKEE

Perhaps the most thrilling episode from the historic viewpoint, as well as from the humorous, is the big tournament staged in "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," the William Fox production of Mark Twain's story, now in its fourth week at Miller's.

This scene shows the meeting, in the jousts, of the challenger, Sir Sagramore, and the challenged Yankee (Sir Boss, as he has been dubbed by the Arthurian king.)

The issue is brought about by Sagramore's intense jealousy of Sir Boss, who has also been appointed magician to the court. "Sir Sag.," as he is jocularly termed by the Yankee, declares that the latter, in rescuing Sandy (Pauline Starke) from the scheming and seductive Queen Morgan le Fay, has brought back only a scullery maid, and so deserves no honor.

"You'll eat those words, Saggy, or I'll knock your block off," snappingly declares the Yankee. Whereupon Sagramore challenges him to meet in the jousts, to "do battle unto death with lance and sword."

The tournament takes place before the castle of the king, in a spacious inclosure about which are ranged the tents of the knights, as in the days of old. The seats and boxes are thronged with spectators. Sagramore is fully armored, grandly plumed and mounted on a gaylypanoplied steed. The Yankee emerges from his booth in typical cowboy costume, making the huge saddles of the knights appear as truck wagons. The Yankee lassoes the bulky Sagramore, topples him from his horse and drags him around to Arthur, to be proclaimed triumphant.

He has proven himself the champion of common sense versus knight errantry.

The incident puts the audience in an uproar.

"You still have your neck," pokes the Yankee at Sir Sagramore, as the latter draws up before his booth, defeated and disgraced, "and for that you should be thankful."

PROTEAN ACTS.

"Alice in Blunderland" and "Bill Sykes" at Orpheum.

Old names with new material are always welcome in vaudeville, and so it is that next week's bill at the Orpheum, opening Monday matinee, is a program that will have an added appeal because of this fact.

Florence Ames and Adelaide Winthrop, who head it with Owen McGiveney, are not strangers here, by any means; they have been here repeatedly, and always have been welcome.

But this time they bring an entire novelty—"Alice in Blunderland" it is called, and when you recall the original Alice and what happened to her, and then realize what might be made out of a travesty of it, you get a faint idea of the wonders that will happen when Alice enters Blunderland.

Mr. McGiveny, on the other hand, proffers his well-established protean act, "Bill Sykes." This is the gist of "Oliver Twist," done wholly by himself, he portrays the characters of Nancy, Bill, Oliver, Fagin and the rest, with changes of voice, raiment and manner that are marvelous. The scenic effects are, of course, wholly adequate, and the atmosphere of Dickens is most accurately preserved.

Harry Anger and Netta Packer are two Fifth avenue types who come to offer a musical comedy skit, "Don't Push." Oscar Loraine is the violin nuttist whose advent here some eighteen months back recorded a new idea in nutology and fun.

Phil Roy and Roy Arthur, in "A Chinese Restaurant," are chinabreakers of renown who also juggle and make fun. Lillian Price and Bud Bernie have some tunes and laughs of 1921, and Lillian's comedy pets, seven toy canines, will delight.

Victor Moore, Emma Littlefield and their company are still doing their back stage act, but will have a new troupe to play within the coming week.

MONTEREY WORK FINISHED.

After nine weeks on location near Monterey, Cal., Erich Von Stroheim is actually returning to Universal City this week. He has shot several miles of film for his super-feature, "Foolish Wives." Nearly all of the 150 extra people and much of the electrical equipment have already arrived at the studio, and Von Stroheim and the principal players will follow today or tomorrow.

STRINGENCY DOESN'T HIT FILMS, HE SAYS

United Artists' Head Declares Public Demand for Entertainment is Unabated.

While the demand for entertainment continues unabated, there will not be any severe stringency in the picture business.

This is the gist of the opinion expressed by Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists, who is now in this city, regarding the business status of the film industry. Mr. Abrams has been conferring each evening with members of the United Artists at the residence of Douglas Fairbanks.

Plans for the year's productions have been discussed, and an announcement concerning future policies is expected during the present week.

"There is nothing new in saying we are going through a gigantic industrial readjustment," said Mr. Abrams. "But there is something new in the statement that the picture industry will prosper regardless of any apparent financial depression."

Mr. Abrams then pointed out that the "Buyers' Strike" which is hitting every other line, is not affecting the amusement business.

"People were never more hungry for entertainment," he continued. "It is well-nigh impossible to obtain seats even through speculators for most of the New York shows, and every picture house on Broadway is doing capacity business. Some of them are establishing new attendance totals almost every week.

"Twice within the last month the box office record at the Capitol, the largest theater in the United States, has been eclipsed, the first time by Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Mark of Zorro' and later by a foreign-made picture."

This condition is typical of the theater situation throughout the entire country, Mr. Abrams pointed out, all of which indicates there is an unprecedented demand for the product of the screen.

"After all," said Mr. Abrams, "the success of any business, regardless of mitigating circumstances, depends upon the demand of the buying public for the product. And when financial interests fully understand that never in the history of the country has there been a more healthy demand for good motion picture plays, the matter of obtaining money to finance productions will be made much easier.

"For that reason, I say, there can be no serious upheaval in the picture business at this time. Without doubt, this industry will adjust itself much quicker than any other in the country."

Mr. Abrams was accompanied on his western trip by Dennis F. O'Brien, attorney for Mary Pickford and Mr. Fairbanks, and Mark Larkin, publicity representative for the two stars.

The Whole Story.

A New Treatment that Beautifies Your Complexion

Soften—Whiten—Cleanse in the Common Sense Way

The texture of your skin depends upon the size of the pores. These little pores are the natural exits of the oils that tiny glands beneath the skin manufacture to nourish the tissues and keep the skin soft and smooth.

The dust and dirt that the face is exposed to, settle in these little pores and clog them. If these impurities are allowed to remain they will enlarge the pores and irritate the skin. A muddy, greasy skin is simply one that can not breathe.

What Does Angelus Lemon Cleansing Cream Do?

Angelus Lemon Cleansing Cream is made of soothing oil emollients and whitening lemon. It works deep into the pores where soap and water will not go. The soft cream assimilates the oil and dirt that has accumulated in the pores and removes it. Rub the dainty cream well into the skin with the tips of the fingers. Always rubbing outward and upward so that tired droopy lines are not encouraged. Then with a soft cloth remove the cleansing cream.

Now that the Skin Can Breathe—Nourish the Tissues

Angelus Skin Food replaces all the natural oils that exposure, over-heated houses and frequent powderings have drawn out of the skin. Without these oils the skin would soon become harsh, drawn and wrinkled.

At night, after your pores are cleansed with Angelus Lemon Cleansing Cream, massage Angelus Skin Food well into the skin. The hungry tissues quickly absorb the soothing nourishment and are kept supple and refreshed.

Angelus Skin Food is an excellent retiring cream. It not only strengthens and vitalizes the tissues beneath the skin but it whitens and softens the surface at the same time.

There are no harmful chemicals in any of the Angelus Creams and they positively will not grow hair. All the whitening is done by the action of the lemon which has been deftly blended with the soothing substances.

PIERRE KEY'S Music Article

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY

NEW YORK, January 3.

Santa Claus never forgets New York in his annual swing-round-the-circle. Preparatory to his visit here there was a lessening of quantity in the way of recitals; but the generous old chap always appears to be sorry for that respite, for he unloads his pack with a vigor which usually leaves us gasping. Apart from the "Don Carlos" feature at the Metropolitan, and the oddity of hearing the Flonzaley Quartet appear as "soloist" in the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra's New York presentation of Emanuel Moor's new concerto, we had rather a nice musical recess. Then came December 26 and the deluge. The outstanding individualistic features of the week, of course, were the appearances of Arturo Toscanini and Albert Coates; the former an old-time friend, though virtually new as a conductor of symphonic music, with Mr. Coates showing up the quality of his orchestral leadership capacities for the very first time.

The "Don Carlos" revival should really have been termed a premiere. We hadn't had the Verdi opera done for us since April, 1877, which is farther back musically than most of us go. Scenically, the production was up to the best Gatti mark, and the best Urban skill in conception and execution. The trouble centered in an overdose of the score; it needed pruning, and badly. There is still time to turn the endeavor into what Henry Finck of the Post terms "an American success out of a European failure." So we trust Mr. Gatti will consider reconsidering. Something like forty minutes of dreary recitative and other unmusical music would lighten the burden for our ears. Enough is always enough.

Verdi put his well-known "O don fatale"—the great air for contralto which is familiar to most concert audiences—into this opera; and he also wrote some other music which was excellent. But his fame will not endure through his "Don Carlos." The drama of the Schiller tragedy is gloomy, and needs extremely capable actors to do it justice; the music spins out, in spots, into an endless chain of notes.

THE CRITICAL VERDICT.

The chain gang of critics was in its element. It praised the achievement, as was right and proper; but thereafter the hammers rang out merrily upon the anvil. There were some dissenters; a few who thought Verdi a pretty fair composer as measured by this "Don Carlos" music, yet the majority did not exude enthusiasm. Several of the experts felt that a greater conductor than Maestro Papi—who is capable, nevertheless—could have gotten more from the score.

I personally found the representation interesting, and Mr. De Luca walking off with the individual honors of the evening with respect both to singing and acting. Mme. Matzenauer, always the fine artist, found some of the music too high for her voice, and some portions too florid for it; but she was dramatically dignified. Miss Ponselle has considerable still to learn in a histrionic way; we forgive her much, however, because of her exceptional voice and her rare singing talent, even though it must travel some distance to touch the hallmark of genuine distinction. Mr. Martinelli was often satisfying in some of his vocal phrases, and he looked well; beyond these matters he was Mr. Martinelli, and not within gunshot of the character he endeavored to represent. Mr. Didur, fine actor though he be, distresses us a great deal whenever he attempts to sing. He is hollow-voiced and sepulchral. The ballet had its effective moments, though few. We will want to see what Mr. Gatti intends doing with his work. It appears to need a vigorous massaging to reduce its weight.

For all that the five physicians who were summoned to attend Enrico Caruso last Sunday, the feeling exists that he will recover in less time than some pessimists believe. Pleurisy is painful, but responds, we are authoritatively advised, to good care and rest. Mr. Caruso is having both now. The fact that he is so prominent a public personality moves many to exaggerate in their minds any indisposition or illness which affects him. No predictions can, of course, be made as to the length of time he will be incapacitated, but it is hoped that it will not be for more than a fortnight or so.

Quartet as Soloist.

Whoever heard of a string quartet figuring as "soloist" in a concerto for orchestra and quartet? It sounded as odd, I can assure you, as it reads in print. Four in one . . . on the firing line of musical individuality. This appeared to be Emanuel Moor's idea: but it was about all he had in the work, which ran forty minutes, disclosing no more than the original thought—so far as the music is concerned.

Mr. Moor is a gifted Hungarian composer . . . in certain ways. He is technically well equipped; he knows the orchestra, hence his instrumentation—in this concerto as in other of his works—had a certain element of color. But the quartet was swallowed as neatly as though the orchestra had been a boa contrictor and the Flonzaleys (fine artists though the are) the poor rabbit. Mr. Stokowski conducted with skill, but no living conductor can save a weak composition, which this one assuredly is.

There have been other recent orchestral concerts, though none (excepting those led by Messrs. Toscanini and Coates, which will be considered in detail in my next article) that moved us to any particular excitement. One scarcely becomes musically excited at this period of the year unless something much out of the ordinary happens; we are rather fed up on music, so that it must be highly spiced to satisfy the jaded palate.

Two piano artists — ladies — sprang into the breach during the musical lull, and by their ardor and musical abilities made a loud noise. As artists, however, they did not go far. After Guy Maier and Lee Pattison, any pianistic team must be more than excellent ensemble and individual performers.

I heard Mishel Piastro give another exhibition of admirable violin playing, and Mischa Levitski and Sascha Jacobsen played the piano and the violin for the purpose of swelling the Miss McGill Fellowship Fund. Otherwise, there was nothing at the time this had to be written to merit any space.

METROPOLITAN PROSPERS.

There is no need for the Metropolitan Opero Company management to bother about exchange rates, or export credits, or Federal Reserve banks . . . or anything else having to do with finance or fiscal agents. Mr. Gatti is one of the best little money-gatherers we have anywhere around. He sits in his office in the corner of the operahouse at Seventh avenue and Thirty-ninth street and pores over his repertoire chart, picking winners with a regularity which no racing form-player ever approached.

If it is a rainy track, Mr. Gatti trots out his best "mud" opera. If the operahouse track is fast, then he offers the best work in his stable. And always he wins. There is never any uncertainty. No hesitation as to the particular opera or the cast or choosing the moment when the public is responsive to what it should respond to.

Sitting there, all by his lonesome. Mr. Gatti proceeds leisurely with his diagram, and presto!—the thing is done; hte public swarms into the operahouse where it sits, seemingly content, while the Metropolitan box-office men count the heaps of money left in exchange for tickets.

Every holiday matinee has been a financial success. Every extra performance has been a financial success. And both kinds have been rather in the way of artistic successes, too. It looks like a Gatti year in every conceivable way. Business and professional men may be worrying heir heads off; President-elect Harding may have his troubles selecting a cabinet which will both satisfy the office-seekers and obtain results, but . . Giulio Gatti-Casazza goes serenely on his way, the opera monarch of this part of the world, and likely so to continue for some time to come.

Caruso has fallen ill, recovered, fallen ill again, once more come back to vocal activity, and is now seemingly out of the Metropolitan casts for a while at least. Other artists have succumbed to the annual autumnal and early winter colds. But the wheels of the Metropolitan continue to revolve in a way that produces excellent performances, which is the main thing.

Nobody has yet solved the mystery for the sudden withdrawal of Mme. Ganna Walska from the Chicago Opera Company on the very eye when she was to have made the hit of her life as Zaza in Leoncavallo's opera of that name. If only she had appeared. We, in America, have had no chance to judge completely of the operatic capacities of the recently made Mrs. Alexander Smith Cochran. She sang in some performances of French light opera (as I wrote some months ago in this column a few years since, without moving anyone to sudden or violent outbursts of applause. So if Mme. Walska had sung and acted I doubt if Miss Farrar need have worried over having any laurels taken from her. Still, one can never tell: the Polish soprano might have surprised us. The latest in the affair (for neither Mr. Cochran nor Mrs. Cochran will talk for publication) is that the couple will go abroad at once—they planned to do so as this was being written—for an extended stay And it is reported that Mme. Walska will accede to her husband's desires that she discontinue any further attempts to make a career.

BITS OF VERSE.

Homecoming.

There's just a little door,
A little path and gate;
There's just a little, narrow lane;
He's just a little late!

Before he turns the corner
And down the little lane
My heart has twice looked out the door,
And come to me again.

Before he'll clear the path,
While yet the small gate clicks.
My heart will turn a somersault,
And miss a dozen tricks.

Before he makes the door,
And looks down in my eyes,
No telling what my heart will do
To plot him a surprise!

A sighing in my breast—
Why, there is nothing in it!
There goes my red heart down the lane,
At least a mile a minute!

Worse Than Here?

In England reluctance for servant jobs grows,
With guarantees plenty, as everyone knows,
Of outings, and dances, and cinema shows.

Each maid-of-all-work is as shy as a fawn;
From peasant-girl classes are parlor maids drawn;
John Bull doesn't know where his footmen have gone.

A million ex-soldiers are idle, folks say;
Yet coachmen are scarcer, whatever you pay;
And heroes leave work to the commoner clay.

And yet we may wonder, when truth shall appear,
As data for contrasts all clear and all queer,
If things are worse there than we're finding them here.

Good Old Dad.

It's father's time of year, this is,
When the days are cold and the blizzards bliz,
And the frost is on the pane.
The opened window down he slams,
And shivers out of his pajams,
But he likes it, in the main.

It's father's duty, bless his soul,
To shovel on the mornin' coal
Defying winter's storm.
First out of bed and cold, but say,
He's glad to do it any day—
Just so the kids are warm.

And any town in old Vermont

And sirloin in its glory,
And with the breath of violets
And traffic's hurly-burly,
New York presents the oyster served

The Days.

"I shall be glad to go," she said,
"The days are gray and thin;
The days are like a dark wood
That I must wander in.

"The days are like an old song
I have forgot to sing,
Plucked at the fall of twilight
On a lone haunting string.

"The days are like a chill wind
All folded full of snow,
The days are dumb as frost," she said;
"I shall be glad to go."

MILESTONES IN HER CAREER.

A review of past history reveals that Elsie Ferguson's present visit to Los Angeles for the filming of "Sacred and Profane Love" is but one of several that have had signifleance in her career. She came to this city in musical comedy during her first year on the stage. Her second visit was made in the Wilton Lackaye company during her first trial as a leading woman. The third trip was in "Such a Little Queen," her first starring vehicle, while the present visit represents the first time she has made a motion picture in California.

"CLARENCE."

The Tarkington Comedy Still Drawing the Crowds.

"Have you seen 'Clarence?'" is a popular query, for thousands of people who have seen this wonderfully clever comedy at the Majestic are anxious that their friends do not miss it.

This afternoon this funny Booth Tarkington comedy will begin the tenth week of its presentation by Thomas Wilkes, and with each week it grows more and more popular.

A returned soldier seeking a position does not sound very funny, but Tarkington has succeeded in imparting into the character of Clarence much of that humor that has made him the beloved author that he is.

Thomas Wilkes should well be proud of the excellent work his company is doing, for this capable group of players headed by Edward Everett Horton and Evelyn Varden contribute much towards the success of the play. Especially good is the work of Sara Sothern and Stanley Taylor, who bring to life those delicious child creations of the author.

HAVE YOU SEEN HIM?

Have you ever seen this animal? He's a species of the street-car seat hog and may be seen by straphangers almost any morning or evening. A man boards the car and happens to stand in front of the hog. There 's probably six inches of seat space on each side of him, but apparently he needs it for elbow room while he reads his paper. He is blind to everybody around him until a woman comes near. Suddenly he comes out of his trance, realizes that he can make room for her without giving up his seat, and begins crowding the man to his right or left. If the latter is unable to move, the hog looks at him as if to say: "Well, you big boob, are you planted there?" Then he goes back to his paper. But—if another woman gets on the car and stands in front of him, watch how blind he is to everything beyond his newspaper. You'll usually find that a man who won't make room when he can for another man will rarely offer his seat to a woman.—[Columbus Dispatch.

ING WOOD MORE WORK.

Service Campaign on to Plant Trees.

Under Way to Grow Two Only One Did.

Educate Business to Extra Lumber.

DERIC J. HASKIN.
CORRESPONDENCE.]

GTON (D.C.) Jan. 7.—To grow where one grew is general the aim of the Forest Service; but that known as the Forest Laboratory, at Madison, demonstrated the possibil- the wood supply in other way—by making the work, or furnish the material, that two trees

Thus the Forest Products Laboratory, during the entire ten-year period of its existence, has cost the nation but $2,000,000. It claims to have repaid this many times over by creating new taxable values. For example, the claims actually paid by the railroads for loss and damage to goods in transit amounts to $100,000,000 annually. The Forest Products Laboratory found that a large part of this loss was due simply to a wrong method of nailing covers on boxes. An improved method of nailing has been worked out by the laboratory and adopted by the National Association of Box Manufacturers and through them by many companies and shippers. It is pointed out that if this method results in a saving of but 1 per cent it will be worth $1,000,000 a year to the nation.

MILLIONS SAVED.

Again, it is a matter of record that during the war experiments conducted at the laboratory in making water-resistant glues and in the use of plywood saved the War Department $6,000,000. Investigations made at the laboratory during the past year in the use of cotton hull fiber and second-cut cotton linters for pulp have made available 200,000 tons of material for this purpose. Plants for making paper pulp out of this new material have been established, with a total capacity of 300 tons a day, and the annual sales value of their product is $15,000,000. The laboratory has made a study of the methods of taking turpentine from pine trees, with the result that methods have come into use which yield more turpentine and destroy less timber. The average annual saving resulting from this work is $4,000,000 per year. In these and other ways the laboratory claims to have increased production and decreased waste to the amount of at least $30,000,000 a year.

What the laboratory asks is that a small percentage of the wealth which it has created be given back to it for doing new constructive work. The tasks that await it are far larger and more important than those it has done.

The field in which it works in the first place is an enormous one. The lumber and wood-using industries in this country represent an investment of $12,000,000,000, they employ about a million people, they are first among the nation's industries in the number of employees and second in the invested capital and in the annual value of their products. Our civilization is built of wood as much as of steel, and there is no substitute for wood in most of the ways it is used. We face a constant dwindling of the source of supply. The economical use of wood is second in importance among industrial problems only to the establishment of a sound forest policy.

WASTE OF WOOD.

And we waste wood from the time the tree is cut until the finished product is put on the market. Logging operations in the woods are enormously wasteful. Losses in the seasoning of wood in this country are estimated at $50,000,000 annually. The use of preservative processes on ties, poles, posts, piling, mine timbers, shingles, lumber and other wood exposed to the weather would save the country about $75,000,000 a year. The annual loss from fire in this country is about $200,000,000 a year. A large part of this is in wooden structures, and a large part of it could be avoided by the use of fire-retarding paints and compounds and fire-resisting construction. With the country facing a paper shortage which is rapidly putting books beyond the reach of all but the well-to-do, 55 per cent of the wood fed into the pulp digesters is now lost in the waste sulphite liquors.

These are only some of the problems which the wood-using industries face. All of these wastes are in some degree unavoidable. The ways of avoiding most of them are already known in theory, have been demonstrated experimentally. What is needed is further experiment to perfect and standardize methods and to put them on a commercial basis. This is the real constructive work of industry. It is the work which advances our industrial technology as a nation. It is the work which enables us to compete more effectively with other nations. It is the work which tends ultimately to add to the wealth and leisure of every man by perfecting the control of the human race over nature.

This work calls for endowed scientific laboratories. The industrial concerns themselves cannot do it, cannot be expected to do it. They are organized on a basis of profit and loss, and their first concern must be the immediate financial success rather than scientific progress. Business recognizes this fact by readily turning to a national bureau like the Forests Products Laboratory for aid and guidance. Their support is necessary to a true industrial progress.

HAMILTON'S NEW BOOK.

Clayton Hamilton of the Goldwyn editorial department has just had a new book published by Henry Holt & Co. It is called "Seen on the Stage" and is the fourth volume of a series, the other three being "The Theory of the Theater," "Studies in Stagecraft" and "Problems of the Playwright." The new volume is dedicated to Henry Arthur Jones, the English playwright now visiting this country. Mr. Hamilton was professor of dramatic literature at Columbia University until he resigned to come to the Goldwyn studios.

MAY LOAN STAR AGAIN.

Marshall Neilan, who has Colleen Moore under a long term contract, may loan that popular young actress for another picture. Recently Miss Moore finished playing the leading feminine role in "The Sky Pilot," for which production she was borrowed by King Vidor. A producer is now trying to secure her services for the featured role in a highly dramatic photoplay.

INCREASING PRODUCTION.

William Lord Wright, scenario writer and director, has been placed in charge of the serial and western branch of the Universal scenario department, under the direction of Lucien Hubbard, scenario editor. Universal is about to begin two-serial productions, one starring Art Acord and the other Eileen Sedgwick, and will add two more western companies to the list.

BERMUDA ATTRACTS ALICE.

Taking vacations out of America has become a popular pastime with screen stars. Elsie Ferguson has just returned from a tour around the world, Ethel Clayton from Europe and Roscoe Arbuckle from Paris. Now it is Alice Brady who has taken a hop over to Bermuda for a short rest.

IN METRO SPECIAL.

Nelson McDowell has been engaged by Metro for an important part in "Home Stuff," Viola Dana's new picture. Mr. McDowell is a veteran character actor, and will have the role of a stern old farmer in "Home Stuff."

JAIL IMPROVEMENTS WILL BE DISCUSSED.

Having started on a program for drastic changes at the City Jail, especially as regards women prisoners, the Woman's Club of Long Beach will devote an entire session Friday, at St. Luke's Parish House, to hearing the facts regarding the jail. Mrs. Florence V. Miller will speak on "Ethics of the Jail" and club members will give two-minute talks. Those who will speak have either served on the jail committee of the city affairs department of the club or are otherwise informed as to the jail problem.

When the committee waited upon the City Trustees, they were met with the plea, "We haven't money to run the jail like a Hotel Virginia," and the answer of the women is, "We do not ask for so much, but we do ask that six women shall not be put where the accommodations are for two as now. We ask that the vermin and filth be removed and an antirat drive made. The president of the club, Mrs. C. H. Spence, tells of the hysteria of inmates of the jail, resulting from the many rats that scurry about in the daytime as well as at night.

The police department will be represented by Commissioner W. M. Peck, Police Judge Carl Hawkins and former Chief James I. Butterfield. At the close of the more formal addresses, the meeting will be open to club members for further discussion of the problem.

SOUTHERN DINNER BY BIG SISTER LEAGUE.

A charming Southern dinner was given Thursday evening at the Big Sister League Training Home, 2118 Trinity street, with Mrs. E. B. Welrick, president of the league, as mistress of ceremonies. The dinner was made even more pleasurable by music from Mr. and Mrs. Spencer-Kelly. Past progress was reviewed informally. This exceedingly worthwhile organization has for its objects the maintenance of a home for women and children released from the courts on probation or parole in the custody of probation officers, to encourage the development of the probation system for women and to assist in the reformation of offenders and the prevention of crime. No destitute woman making application and considered worthy is refused admittance to this nonsectarian home. Last year sixty-eight girls were admitted from Probation Court, forty from Los Felis and twenty-two on their own request, 85 per cent of them making definitely good and sixty-eight girls returned to their own homes during the year. There were 7539 meals served during the year at the average cost of 9 cents. Mrs. Minnie Barton, probation officer, is superintendent of the home and the list of officers and board members includes the names of some of the most prominent club women in Southern California.

It's a wise woman who will know her own fur after it has been remodled at the Bogue Fur Shop into something clever and up to date! Oh, those "cupidettes" are wonderful! The "petite roches" and "bouchettes" would melt in your mouth—to say nothing about the delicious "pralinettes," puddings and chocolate mousses found among those most unusual bon bons at Paulais, 641 S. Broadway. There's a sweetness and delicacy of flavor in these candies which brings joy to the lover of sweets.

Cunning little vanity bags are fashioned from tiny artificial flowers —resembling a nosegay, for all the world!

Of nodding plumes and "ladyes fayre" we prattle on anon and yet it seems we have only just begun to tell the divers ways in which the graceful ostrich feathers may be used! And there should be clusters of these same feathers on the dainty dancing frock, and cunning flowerettes of ostrich flues and fringes, too, on silken lingerie! The robe d'intereur is enhanced with tiny plumes and the silken mules are covered with the flues. And I saw a lovely lady awearing plumes in clusters upon a modish cape! Two Things Wanted Now in New Hats

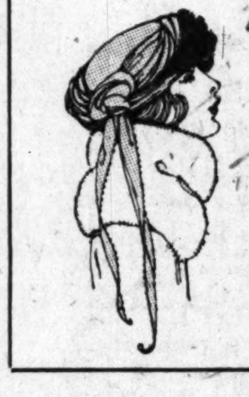
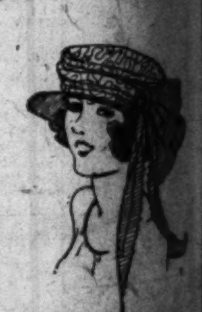
Pearl Gray Colors and Streamers





PRACTICALLY all women can wear pearl gray to advantage — hence its great popularity. And every hat that floats a streamer is indebted to it for an increased charmingness.

In turbans a streamer is a continuation of the material covering the crown; in a hat with a brim, the streamer may be a big bow of ribbon of lighter shade, drooping over the brim. And none are without their cheery brightness—bright red straw often covers a crown. Prices start at $15.

"YANKEE" IS A PRIZE KIDDER.

Harry Myers, Actor, Appears as Myers, Gardener.

How His Father Tried to Sell Mark Twain Cigars.

Stock and "Repertoire" as Means to Success.

BY GRACE KINGSLEY.

"They gave me the part of the Yankee in King Arthur's court because they couldn't get anybody else!"

That's how Harry Myers, with a modest grin, explains it. But the remark cuts two ways. For of a certainty the Fox people tried out a score of actors before they assigned Myers to the role. It was found very hard to secure an actor who could both play the part and really look it.

Interviewing Harry Myers is like trying to interview a bush-league Thomas H. Edison, a budding Gale and a Will Rogers all at once. And he's liable to turn into any one of the three characters without a moment's notice. But always he refuses to take himself seriously, always he's as breezy as an afternoon at the beach—a regular Yankee both in and out of King Arthur's court.

And oh, yes, girls, he's happily married, "though living in Hollywood," as Lew Cody would say.

It's a nice-looking house the Yankee dwells in, as I noted while walking up to ring the front door bell. There was no answer. I waited awhile, and then went around to the side of the house and looked up the driveway.

There I caught sight of a man in working clothes, with an eye-shade pulled down over his eyes. He was holding a 2x4 on the back bumper of an automobile with one hand while he sawed with the other.

I called out to him, "Are you Harry Myers?"

"Well, that all depends," he said. "What, with that business-like look in your eyes and those papers in your hands, I don't believe I am. I just have a little room here, and the people, rather than have me in the house, said I could watch the garden, look after the garage, keep the front yard clean, also the back yard, the side lawns, the front porch and the back porch, not to mention the cellar. But I'll tell you confidentially they keep part of the cellar locked when I am in it, and——"

"Oh, then you're the gardener," I said.

"Wait a minute. What do you want Harry Myers for?"

"Oh, just a little write-up," I answered. I was sure seeing him even in his disguise that he was the Yankee.

"Oh, that isn't necessary," said the pseudo-gardener seriously, with all but a twinkle in his eye. "I heard him say that he read a lot of patent medicine labels and sent testimonials with some photographs to all the firms and now he's waiting for the ads to come out with his pictures in them. But if you're sure those papers you have in your hand are not a summons, I'll get Mr. Myers for you."

I assured him the papers were nothing so painful, so he said: "All right, I'll get him."

Whereupon he squeezed through the garage door, past the car, turned around, squeezed back through the door again, and exclaimed: "Sorry to keep you waiting!"

"Who'd forget the Yankee's grin?" I demanded. "Did you think you were fooling me?"

GENUINE KIDDER.

Then we settled down for a real interview; that is as much of a one as you could expect with a person who refuses to take anything, himself included, seriously. He kids about everything. For instance, when I spoke to him about his stock experience in Philadelphia, he exclaimed frankly: "Oh, I was lucky to be a decent-looking butler once in a while! Say, I made all the cannon balls for 'The Girl I Left Behind Me.' And they were good cannon balls, too. I invented 'em."

That was where we got off onto the artist and mechanician side of Myers.

"What were you sawing the wood for?" I asked.

Myers said it was to make a dog pergola. Asked what kind of a dog he had, he answered whimsically that he hadn't any.

Then I asked him what he was building the pergola for, and he said, pointing, for the same reason he built that little Belgian dog house over there.

The dog house was painted yellow, with a stencil of vines over it. It had a Gothic door, round windows with awnings and a black chimney and a wide porch, and on this porch was nailed a little sign, "To rent—to some good dog!"

Its interior was nicely decorated and I thought how I'd have loved it for a doll's house when I was a little girl.

And then he showed me a toy automobile which he had also built.

No wonder he knew how to turn old suits of armor into Fords in "The Yankee."

About his career, Myers insisted on telling it in his own whimsical, kidding way. His father was born in a little town in Connecticut, named Windsorlocks, said Myers, "which you have to look on a railroad map to find, and then it says Tanktown."

Oddly enough, Myers, Sr., knew Mark Twain, and really served as the original for the drawing of the Yankee, which illustrates the Twain tale. He was a sort of master of all trades, and when he met Twain it was as a seller of cigars, thinking he could advertise his firm's goods by saying Twain smoked them.

MARK TWAIN'S CIGARS.

"But when I found the kind that Twain smoked, I didn't insist," Myers, Sr., told his son. "I was afraid I'd do my firm more harm than good."

"It was in New Haven that Pop met Mom," said Myers, "and then along came me, and as soon as I was able to think about things, and long before I could talk instead of summing things all up by trying to speak, I pantomimed my dislike of New Haven.

"'Say, mother,' dad said to her, 'this child just made a good suggestion in pantomime. He says, 'Let's get out of New Haven and see something of the world.'

"So we moved. I tried a number of lines of work, all through my youth, but finally decided I'd rather act.

"I romped through nine years in stock, with the Durban and Sheeler Stock Company, at the Girard-avenue Theater, in Philadelphia, under direction of Drew Morton.

"He was a wonderful man. He was so outspoken and sincere with it.

"I remember one day my mother came to the theater and asked him how I was getting on, and he looked up, half smiled, and said, 'Isn't there anything else the poor boy can do?'

"Mother answered, 'If there is, I don't know what it is.'

"He saw the pathetic look in her eyes, so he said, 'All right; let him stay here. It will keep him off the street, and I'll put him up on the paint frame, where they decorate the scenery.'

"So I stayed there two seasons. And at the end of the second season he complimented mother on the way I played butlers and led the mobs!"

After that Myers had two seasons with Forepaugh Stock Company, still in Philadelphia.

"George Lerock was another fine stage director," said Myers, "but awfully particular. I had worn my dress shirt only about two-thirds of the season, when one day he asked me what I was going to do with it when it got soiled. I said, 'When it gets really soiled, so it shows, you know, I'll have a new bosom put in it.'

"Awhile after that I went into road stock. Some people call it repertoire.

"Repertoire companies are wonderful things to be with, because that's where you gain the real experience needed in this business.

Olga Gray Zacsek to Play Title Role in Poel Production.

With Olga Grey Zacsek, a protege of Nazimova, in the title role, "Hedda Gabler," one of Ibsen's best-known plays, will begin a limited engagement at the Egan Little Theater Monday night.

The production is being staged under the direction of Reginald Poel, who produced "When We Dead Awaken" and "Rosmersholm."

Juan de la Cruz will have the principal masculine role. Other important members of the cast are Catherine Henry and Victor Rodman.

At the conclusion of the engagement of "Hedda Gabler," Mr. Egan has arranged with Oliver Morosco to send Olga Grey Zacsek East to do a series of Ibsen matinees at one of the Morosco New York theaters.

NEW VOGUE FOR THE CLASSICS?

Striking Evidence Given in Mantell Engagement.

Actor Greatly Exceeds His Previous Seasons.

"Julius Caesar" Leads Plays in Popularity.

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT.

The next time a company comes to town with Shakespearean repertoire, the word will probably be quietly passed around among the regular theater patrons—"Buy your seats early." Or else, "Mail in your order in advance."

The reason?

Because, if two weeks' season of Robert Mantell, which close last night, be any criterion, you will otherwise be among that disappointed group, who, after standing in line for an hour or two, reach the box office "too late."

In other words, the long-anticipated veering of public favor to the classics has at last apparently taken place. Just as in New York, a season ago, the public was crowding to see Mantell, and also Sothern and Marlowe, so they have been doing the same thing here with Mantell during the past fortnight.

With a few exceptions, the Mason drew a capacity audience at the various performances, and certain of the plays "turned away" those who sought entrance.

Nothing like the Mantell engagement has been heretofore recorded at the house in the classic drama. The actor star even exceeded his own previous drawing power.

It is estimated by the house management that the receipts were $7000 to $10,000 larger than at the previous Mantell series several seasons ago.

The business was the more unusual because the actor and his company were playing against another repertoire company—the San Carlo opera at Philharmonic Auditorium. On several nights both attractions drew capacity audiences.

Perhaps the public to which Shakespeare and opera appeal is not the same. But, still, it is not wholly differentiated; of that one may be sure. In fact, a great majority of opera lovers are equally zealous in their appreciation of classic drama.

PLAY OR ACTOR?

What is the cause of this sudden reawakening to the beauties of classic drama? Is it an actor's name? To some extent, yes. But not wholly. Not by half, perhaps.

Everyone who went to see Mantell went largely for the sake of the play in which he was appearing. If that had not been the case "Louis XI" should have drawn an audience commensurate in some degree with the others. Instead, it drew a very poor house. Yet, this production probably affords Mantell the greatest opportunity for acting, as acting.

"Louis XI" was, however, unknown to the majority. Though it was hailed as giving Mantell his most notable opportunity for characterization, this evidently failed to make an impression on the playgoer. The line that daily stood before the box-office window purchased tickets, instead, for "The Merchant of Venice," "Macbeth," "Julius Caesar" and "Richelieu."

The greatest demand for seats was for "Julius Caesar." It seems hard to believe this, because of all Shakespeare's favored plays, this, to my mind, contains less of human interest element. It is splendidly virile, yes, but the psychology lacks the intensity of "Hamlet," "Lear" or even "Macbeth." Nor is it tremendously spectacular, except in its battle scenes. And whatever beauties it possesses are recited out of it during grammar and high school days.

Its oratory is glorious, however, and the familiarity which it has gained through school associations perhaps lend it a certain appeal. Its austerity commands, too, a respect, while its lines, that are as well known as "La Donna e Mobile" to the music-loving public, seemingly ever cultivate a renewal of the public's acquaintance.

"Macbeth," and "The Merchant of Venice" were perhaps similarly attractive, because of their familiar aspect. "Richelieu," too, has the appeal of a popular story.

"AS YOU LIKE IT."

The phenomena of "As You Like It" was rather interesting. This most lyric of Shakespeare's comedies drew splendidly at two matinees, but failed of an evening performance. The explanation is easy.

TODAY'S BILL AT THE HUGE HIPPODROME.

An attractive feature photoplay will be seen at the Hippodrome today, "Rogues and Romance," a thrilling and spectacular melodrama filmed entirely in Spain. George B. Seitz took an entire American company to Spain to make this production, headed by Marguerite Courtot and June Caprice.

The roster of vaudeville attractions includes some prominent vaudevillians, among whom none is better known than Eugene Emmet, "The Irish Minstrel."

Chic and Tiny Harvey will offer something in the nature of a surprise in songs and dances, and Gilmore and Castle will present "Dark Men's Foolishness."

The "Quaker Village Follies" will present a sparkling frolic of melodies and dances offered by the Medlin Twins, Eve Gardner and Hal Ring.

Paul and Pauline in an aerial novelty will round out the show.

Lon Chaney has been selected for the leading male role in "The Night Rose," by Leroy Scott. Leatrice Joy has the leading feminine role and Cullen Landis has an important part. Wallace Worsley, who directed Chaney in the Goldwyn picture, "The Penalty," will hold the megaphone.

20% Reduction of All Prices

As a matter of fact a careful survey of markets shows that the "California's" new prices, based on 20% reduction from the regular marked prices, are actually below the replacement values

Those who contemplate the purchase of home furnishings in the reasonable future may therefore be safely assured that now is the opportune time to buy

The fact that the "California" puts so much care and thought into all its selections, and presents such unusual and superior home furnishings has perhaps been construed by you as an indication of high prices

It is only necessary, however, for you to make a personal comparison of values to convince yourself that you can actually save money by buying at the "California". The fact is that the "California" marks all its merchandise in the first place at the lowest price for which it can consistently be sold, and with no anticipation of future reductions

All furniture, all carpets, rugs and other floor coverings, all drapery and upholstery fabrics, all curtains, all wall papers, absolutely everything in the "California's" vast stocks is reduced 20% below the original marked prices, and in fact the domestic carpets and rugs are reduced 20% in addition to a similar price reduction which was made only a few weeks prior to the time when this general price revision was made effective

Crossing the Plains.

What great yoked beasts with briskets low,
With wrinkled necks like buffalo,
With round, brown, liquid, pleading eyes,
That turned so slow and sad to you,
That shone like love's eyes soft with tears
That seemed to plead, and make replies,
The while they bowed their necks and drew
The creaking load; and looked at you.
Their sable briskets swept the ground,
Their cloven feet kept solemn sound.

Two sullen bullocks led the line,
Their great eyes shining bright like wine;
Two sullen captive kings were they,
That had in time held herds at bay,
And even now they crushed the sod
With stolid sense of majesty,
And stately stepped and stately trod,
As if 'twere something still to be
Kings even in captivity.

Seven Old Masters.

Europe's present financial straits are compelling her to part with many of her most valued art treasures, and we in America are the gainers thereby. To gloat over our good fortune in Europe's misfortune would be a most dastardly thing. Yet we may rejoice that these masterpieces from men of genius are not lost to the world, and since they are destined to be ours, we must endeavor to appraise them truly—to know that they are worth immeasurably more than the money that was paid for them.

Seven paintings by old masters have just reached Los Angeles and are now on exhibition in the gallery of Cannell and Chaffin. They are seven of the forty that were sent from Europe to be exhibited for the benefit of the orphaned children of European soldiers, English, French and Belgian. They are genuine and authenticated works, and they are also paintings of great beauty, carefully chosen from the large exhibition recently held in San Francisco.

Sir Anthony Van Dyck (1599) is represented by a striking portrait which is officially known as "Thomas Chaloner, the Regicide." The author of "Catalogue Raisonne," as well as other writers on Van Dyck, in dealing with this famous portrait have confused father and son. The portrait does not represent Sir Thomas Chaloner, the naturalist, who died in 1615, and who, therefore, could not have been painted by Van Dyck. It represents Sir Thomas Chaloner's third son and namesake, whose chief claim to fame is that he was one of the men who signed the death warrant of Charles I.

The subject of the Van Dyck portrait was the son and grandson of famous men. His grandfather, also a Sir Thomas Chaloner, was a diplomatist, and his portrait was painted by Holbein. There are two portraits of the younger Chaloner from Van Dyck. The best-known version was long one of the treasures of Houghton Hall, Norfolk, the property of the Walpole family. It passed, with other pictures in the Houghton Hall collection, into the possession of the Empress Catherine and now adorns the Hermitage, in Petrograd. The present version, which has been declared by Dr. Bode to be the work of the master, has all the force and vigor of Van Dyck's art during his residence in England.

Even more interesting than the Van Dyck, is the beautiful study by Sir Joshua Reynolds (1723-1792,) "White, the Pavior." It shows us the head, bust and hands of a man, a pavement-layer, who served the famous English artist as model for Count Ugolino in the celebrated picture by him of the Count and his son, now at Knole. The portrait of Ugolino and his son was not finished by Sir Joshua in time for the Royal Academy exhibition of 1771, as the King and Queen were also sitting for portraits, so the artist substituted a study of the head of White, presumably this very "White, the Pavior," which is also known as "Man's Head in Profile."

The flesh is very beautifully and tenderly painted, the hand holding the book is drawn with impeccable distinction, and it is really the portrait of an ascetic, a member of some monastic order. (Or so it seems to us now.)

In George Henry Harlow's large canvas, apparently a trifle over life size, "Lady With Parrot," we have a finely painted portrait with the customary conventional landscape background of the period. The type is English, blond and beautiful, the pose of studied ease is very characteristic of the mode of the day. Harlow (1787-1819) studied with Sir Thomas Lawrence, and, though not so famous as his teacher, still had great vogue as fashionable portrait painter, besides producing many historical paintings.

A highly interesting portrait is that of Conrad Zeller, by Christopher Amberger (1500-1562,) who is quoted as one of the best masters of the sixteenth century. It is believed that he was a pupil and disciple of Hans Holbein the elder. Certainly, this portrait shows the Holbein influence, though much harder in outline than the portraits by his master. In 1532 Amberger painted a portrait of Charles V, which has been compared not unfavorably, to Titian's portrait of the same monarch. For this picture, Charles gave him a gold chain and medal.

Hubert Robert (1733-1808) is noted principally for his paintings of Roman architecture. In the collection at Cannell's we find a characteristic example, a superb piece of drawing in a cool scheme of color, entitled "Ruines Romaines." Robert was thrown into prison during the French revolution, and while incarcerated he painted his most famous picture, "Taking of Prisoners by Torchlight in Open Carts from St. Pelagie to St. Lazarre." He obtained his freedom by a fluke, a mistake of the jailer, who sent another prisoner of the same name to the guillotine.

George Romney (1734-1802) painted that great beauty, Lady Hamilton, who was at once famous and notorious, so many times that all the world knows how lovely she really was Like Helen of Troy, she seemed to turn the head of every man who looked at her. As Romney was a consummate painter of female beauty, we cannot wonder that he was interested. Nor can we quite blame Lord Nelson for his mad infatuation.

The Lady Hamilton at Cannell's is only a brief study, but the flesh tints are "most dexterously handled, and we recognize the face and coloring of the enchantress, though her figure is (here, at any rate,) rather cow-like. The lady shows her origin. This sketch is very much like Romney's "Bacchante"—the same general coloring and flesh tints.

Come we now to the last—but by no means least—of our collection of old masters, Nicholas Maes (1632-1693,) who was a companion with Van der Meer in the school of Rembrandt in Amsterdam. Maes ranks among the best of the Dutch genre painters. The three paintings by him in the National Gallery are of the highest quality. His early paintings are extremely rare, and the one in the present collection, "Princess of Orange," is of a later date. Yet it is very charming, exquisite in drawing, the clothes of the sitter, silks, satins, jewels, as well as the red piece of drapery to the left, painted with great dexterity and truth.

"Princess of Orange" is both signed and dated, the year being 1667. It belonged to the collection of Lord Northwick, Cheltenham. It left Lord Northwick's hands at the Massey-Mainwaring sale, in London, March 16, 1907. The picture at Cannell's tallies exactly with the description given at the Massy-Mainwaring sale, and there is not the shadow of a doubt that it is the same canvas.

You are sure to enjoy your study of these seven old masters, and it is hoped that the data here given, which was collected for your edification with considerable trouble and research, will add something to your pleasure.

Taste Infallible.

Ladv Anne and I were shopping for an hour or so, the other day and I felt how infallible was her good taste, when she selected for the blue-eyed cousin, the quaint, adorable bed-jacket of flesh-colored chiffon, having just enough of trimming to render it elegant, without becoming ornate. Then she chose a boudoir cap in contrast, the latter of a delicate French blue in the shape that holds the hair in place, but does not enter upon duty for the vulgar utilitarian purpose of concealing a lack of morning coiffure, and this cap related to the jacket by means of rosy blossoms where the bridle starts upon its way underneath the chin. A less certain taste might have chosen the single color for both these garments. It was the same throughout the list of articles, lingerie and negligee, the choice in every instance was individualistic and faultless in nicety, made with due respect to the personal points of the wearers to-be.

The up-turned brim of a black velvet hat is of black lace, banded with jade-green ribbon.

Long, straight tunics and panelings are results of the strong Chinese influence on dress.

In spite of its huge popularity last winter, monkey fur is a favored pelt for trimming this season.

The skirt of a black lace frock has across the bottom a wide band of white linen embroidered in black silk.

For sports and for afternoon tea, dresses of crepe de chine and crepe canton are worn.

Bokhara wool is appliqued onto velvet in such a way as to give the effect of stripes.

Jet, imitation coral, jade and turquoise hold their popularity in the realm of ornament.

Tailored blouses of black satin are trimmed in a novel way with dull gold upholstery braid.

Black velvet dresses have wide velvet sashes lined with brilliant colored metal brocaded silks.

Colored artificial flowers made of a material resembling horse hair are used on formal gowns in Paris.

In cotton goods all colors are fashionable. The leading hues are shrimp, pink, tan, yellow, raspberry, mauve and blue.

The loose blouse is generally used with the slim skirt and the fitted bodice with the fuller skirt.

Many evening gowns are extremely short in front and long enough to trail at the sides.

Rows of taffeta petals form an overdrapery and edge the underskirt of a taffeta frock with a tulle tunic.

Some bodices blouse at a low waist line; others hang from the shoulders, with a wide sash at the hips.

The deep armhole of a black velvet dress is outlined with silver, and silver embroidery is used on the skirt.

Velvet poppies ringed with matching flues of ostrich make one shoulder strap of an evening gown, and brilliants make the other.

BREESKIN BARS OUT UNTEMPERAMENTAL.

WON'T PLAY AGAIN FOR THE FILMS, SAYS VIOLIN VIRTUOSO.

Elias Breeskin, noted Russian violinistic virtuoso, is now in San Francisco, having had his fill of "the movies." Breeskin, it seems, was engaged by Producer J. Rarker Read, Jr., to play emotional music for Louise Glaum, the cinematic star, during the filming of the climactic sequence of Read's new production, "The Attorney For the Defense." He consented because of his admiration tor the star.

But recently, Miss Glaum having been excused from the studio because several scenes had to be "shot" by Director Jack Nelson with Mahlon Hamilton, leading man, and Miss Ruth Stonehouse before the camera, Breeskin was asked to play for the duo.

"I am a star myself. For a star I am pleased to play," said Breeskin. "But for others, no. Again, no."

When he was pressed to play he consented, however, saying:

"Well, I will do it. But if he"—pointing to Hamilton—"does not faint with emotion when I play, my name is 'mud' and I quit!"

Then the musician started the first strains of a Weniawski concerto. Suddenly he noticed that the lights were out, the camera had stopped grinding, and Miss Stonehouse and Mr. Hamilton were talking over a piece of "business" on the sidelines of the set.

"They have no temperament," gasped Breeskin as he tucked his "Strad" away in its velvet case. "They have no feeling for the music. Ah, Miss Glaum, she is very, very musical. But never again shall I play for anyone else—in the movies!"

HOLUBAR SOON TO RELEASE FEATURE.

Word has been received by Sol Lesser from Allen Holubar, who is in New York aranging for the premiere of "Man, Woman, Marriage," that his largest production will be ready for release within a month.

Holubar also advises that the posters for the mammoth photoplay prepared by M. Leone Bracker, are among the most beautiful ever made. Bracker spent several weeks in Los Angeles last summer posing Dorothy Phillips, James Kirkwood and other leading members of the "Man, Woman, Marriage" cast for the poster drawings.

As soon as arrangements have been concluded for a Broadway premiere of "Man, Woman, Marriage," Holubar will return to the West Coast to be present at the Los Angeles showing.

I shall probably stay in the south for some time to come, but in the summer I shall simply be obliged to go north to escape the heat. But I have not really planned the places I intend to paint. I will have to wait and see what I like. People here are so kind to strangers—give you information and help you all they can.

"The most common diseases are smallpox and typhoid fever. I am being vaccinated and inoculated for typhoid. The water looks very bad, a green scum everywhere. The natives are not clean—awfully dirty, in fact. And I shall be painting among them, too!

"I got on a car the other day to ride through the native quarter (at 4 o'clock.) I rode for miles, and by the time I got back it was 8 o'clock. My impressions were wonderful — streets filled with swarming natives. I passed some beautiful Hindoo temples that I am going to paint. But think of it—four hours to get there and back!

"Every one here tells me I must have a servant. I suppose they think I am a rich American. And I have to count every penny! Things are frightfully expensive. And you lose on the exchange rate, too. And everywhere else in the world you make on the dollar. I do not believe America does much trading with India, but I wish she did.

"In this hotel are staying many Indians who are half English. Some of the girls are quite pretty, and as fair as I am, but they have a queer pinto look about the eyes. It is so sad for them, as they belong to neither race. I think their fathers and mothers were idiotic not to consider them. There is always some one to suffer for all the mistakes that are made."

AUTHOR BACHELLER SOON TO VISIT US.

Irving Bacheller, who for years stood with the literary anticinema element and who succumbed to the lure of the shadow sheet when he released his novel, "The Light in the Clearing," to T. A notable cast including Clara Horton, Eddie Sutherland, Frank Leigh, Eugenie Besserer, Arthur Morrison and Andrew Arbuckle have been selected by T. Hayes Hunter to interpret Bacheller's novel.

Exhibitors all over the country have established precedent by signing contracts for first-run showings of "The Light in the Clearing," which will not be ready for presentation until early spring.

PORTRAITS OF THESPIANS.

A dozen rare portraits of famous actors of forty years ago which formerly hung in the lobby of the old California Theater, San Francisco, and now the property of Daniel Frawley, for years prominently associated with the drama in the West, were obtained by Stuart Paton to decorate the theatrical office used as a set for Priscilla Dean's current feature, "False Colors." In this story Miss Dean plays a dual role—a famous European dramatic star and a struggling young American actress.

Stability of the Value of Diamonds

No matter what happens to the price of other commodities, the price of Diamonds remains the same. This fact was made apparent when a cablegram was received from the DIAMOND SYNDICATE of LONDON.

In the troublesome times throughout Europe, when nations were tottering and the value of her money shrunk to almost nothing; when land values depreciated and bonds became worthless, it was then that her people turned to their Diamonds. In all countries and all climes no other article has a greater cashable value than the diamond.

Satisfactory Diamond selections greatly depend upon your faith in the merchant. Faith is a potent factor in the buying of Jewelry, Diamonds and Precious Stones. Faith in the merchant is vital to the purchaser's satisfaction.

This institution has maintained a high standard of quality and service for over twenty-seven years to deserve that faith. This is our strength and our customers' safeguard.

Come Tomorrow to See What All the World Will Wear Next Spring

Presenting the Lovely New Fashions for 1921

THE most enchanting spring apparel in a score of years has just stepped into The New York Store, ready for you to see.

–This is your invitation to come tomorrow. We know you are curious to learn what fashionable women will wear during the coming months. And because we have gathered these fine garments from the birth places of fashions, we do not hesitate to offer them to you as authentic in every detail.

Lovely New Gowns

—A host of new materials have blossomed into being with the new season, among which Paisley, Paulette, Canton Crepe, Crepe Elizabeth and Luxette Crepe enjoy first favor in the silk dresses, while Twillcord and piquetwill are two handsome new woolen fabrics.

—Trimming details present many pleasant surprises. An innovation as pleasing as it is unexpected, is the use of hook-and-eyes instead of beads to make up the pretty patterns on scores of new dresses. This new idea is most effective on dresses of white or navy.

—Hand embroidery is as popular a detail as ever on the new dresses. Among the new colors, navy and gray make a smart combination.

New Suits

—While a reversal to the tailored type of suit seems to be the rule this season, The New York Store is full of pretty exceptions to the rule in the way of smart little Eton suits with beaded jackets, dressy Cavalier suits and many other novelty styles.

—Fine twill cloths have been recruited to make most of the suits of this season, with Piquetwill the undisputed favorite. Braids of different kinds are given a large share of attention this season on suits, and are applied in many novel ways.

—On the skirts of many of the suits are embroidered folds of silk which come up under the arms, thus serving as a blouse.

New Wraps and Sport Coats

—Camel's hair is first choice in the selection of the all-important sports coat this spring, which is inclined to favor the practical straight lines.

—Wraps are unusually interesting because of the presence of three such lovely new materials—Florazella, Palmyra and Twillcord. There seems to be a predominance of wraps which are shaped to snug over the shoulders and have a modified sweep at the base.

—Many new and attractive trimming ideas are seen on the new spring wraps.

Blouses

—The new models have not only a charm of beauty but one of price also. They average 25% less than in the previous season.

—Over blouses of Georgette and taffeta are in three popular shades of beige, tomato and zinc.

—White waists with black chenille embroidery and black beads are very popular.

Millinery

—Speaking very truly of spring, these charming new hats are right in the corner on the main floor.

—The new colors of rouge, Adriatic, green, nasturtium and gray, are developed from straw and silk and Georgette, many are beautifully embroidered.

—New York Store hats are from the foremost makers—Joseph Bendel and Bruck-Weiss.

Key to Illustrations

CAPE DRESS—This sport frock boasts a three-piece combination. It is of Luxette silk in bright rose color. And has trimmings of twisted wool embroidery and beads.

ETON DRESS—Con Carne is the name of the orange shade of canton crepe used in this dress which has wool embroidery outlined with beads. Note the short sleeves.

CAVALIER SUIT—Richly embroidered with gun metal beads and with its jacket flaring like the cape from the days of Edward VI is this suit of navy Twill Cord.

BLOUSETTE DRESS—Ivory white Luxette, box pleated coat, low bloused lines, with fringe of corn color beads make the charm of this new frock.

FRINGED SUIT—Piquetwill is a word that will be on everybody's lips in a month from now. It is the new material used in this navy suit with its loose boxy jacket and flaring sleeves. The jacket has fringes in both front and back and the band of embroidered silk attached to the skirt is used as a bodice instead of a waist.

TUNIC CAPE COAT—Quite different than those of winter because of its new silhouette and absence of sleeves. Caramel shade, Special Marvella material and imported woolen sash of caramel and yellow are its other features.

Monday, 20,000 Yards New Spring Silks to Sell at 1.85 Yard

The January Sale of Lingerie

Quite the most alluring sale that has been featured — in that garments are so wonderfully dainty and lacey and prices are so much lower than January White Sales are ordinarily in a position to offer.

Every lingerie need may be so satisfactorily filled now if women will just look ahead to all the underwear requirements that are bound to come up later on in the season—and by buying now realize amazing savings.

Silk Envelope Chemise, 3.65

Fairy-like are these wash satin and crepe de chine models—and the silks are such good qualities. There are so many ways that laces, buds and bows have enhanced their beauty—and one may choose from either strap or built-up styles.

Lace-Trimmed Crepe de Chine Nightgowns, 3.95

That fine quality crepe de chine that one would never hope to buy for 3.95—outside the January Sales. All the dainty trimming touches make them the more exceptional.

"All-Round" Paneled Crepe de Chine Petticoats, 4.45

As surely shadow-proof as any petticoat could be—and as dainty, too, for the trimming is of Calais lace and insertion. One of the values that Hamburger's is proudest of—for 4.45 is indeed a very modest sum.

Nainsook Chemaloons, Crepe Gowns, 1.85

What a happy combination a chemaloon is—with the envelope tops and the bloomer below the waist. These fit especially well and are trimmed with lace and insertion.

The crepe nightgowns, flesh color, are also finished with lace edge, the crepe being a very good quality.

Muslin Drawers and Corset Covers at 75c

The drawers are made of soft muslin, finished with lace and embroidery—the corset covers, fashioned built-up style, also daintily trimmed.

The Year's Silk Sensation!

100 Yds. 40-Inch White Baronette Satin, $1.98

—We haven't the slightest doubt but what every yard of this Baronette Satin would be sold, even if we didn't advertise it or show it in the window—for one has been telling another about it until the Silk Department has been thronged with women asking when the Baronette Satin was to be sold at $1.98.

—But not one yard of it will be sold before Monday at 9 o'clock and that's why we have taken so much space to tell of it here. We want everyone to have an equal opportunity to buy it.

SOUTH PASADENA.

Remarkably successful and largely attended was the community meeting of the various parent-teacher associations of the city, at which the members of the El Centro-street Parent-Teacher Association were the hostesses on Tuesday aftrnoon at the El Centro-street building. Miss Wilhelmina Loos, secretary of the Young Woman's Christian Association of Pasadena, was the speaker of the afternoon, and brought to her hearers a wonderfully optimistic message relative to world conditions, which, at present look dark and foreboding to a great many people. A group of songs was charmingly rendered by Mrs. J. Selwyn Brittain, while Miss Antoinette delighted the audience with several violin selections. Miss Bush is always enthusiastically received in her home city, but especially fine have been her renditions since her months of study last year in New York. At the close of the program, coffee and home-made cakes were served by the members of the refreshment committee. The serving table was beautifully decorated with cut flowers. These community meetings have become an attractive feature in the social and intellectual life of our city, and the one on Tuesday afternoon was said by many to be the most successful, from many points of view, which have been held thus far.

For husband and small daughter, upon the occasion of their birthday anniversaries, which occur on the same day, Mrs. James R. Wilder was a recent hostess at a most enjoyable dinner party given at the Wilder home on Garfield avenue. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Hineman and family, formerly of this city, but now of Hollywood.

Mrs. John C. Stick and her sister, Miss Viola Kohl, were the charming hostesses on Thursday at luncheon, given for the members of A. A. Chapter, P.E.O. The affair was held at the Kohl residence on Bushnell avenue. Following the luncheon, the regular monthly business meeting of the chapter was held.

Mrs. John W. Scott entertained informally at dinner last week at her home on Rollins street, having as her guests, Mr. and Mrs. Will McKenzie, Mr. and Mrs. Graham Scott of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Edward L. Hine of South Pasadena.

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Jones of 1129 Windsor Place complimented several teachers of the El Centro Street School with an enjoyable informal dinner on Thursday at their home. Mrs. Jones is the president of the Parent-Teacher Association of the El Centro-street school district, and has done much to contribute to the social life of the teachers.

As a birthday courtesy to her husband, Mrs. J. Platt Brush of 1705 Bushnell avenue, entertained with a handsomely appointed supper party Sunday evening at the Brush home. It was a "stag" affair, with the guests all University of Wisconsin graduates. The gathering was a happy one, and as reminiscences of former college days were called to mind, the men seemed to linger over again, for the time being, those great days gone by. All present were heartily appreciative of Mrs. Brush's enjoyable way of getting together this congenial group of friends and old college chums.

MONTEBELLO.

Dr. and Mrs. M. R. Parmelee entertained at a delightful dinner Saturday at their home on Dewey avenue, their guests being Mr. and Mrs. W. G. Wisner, Mrs. John Morris, Mrs. Nettie Forsythe, Miss Jeanette Forsythe, Mrs. Bertha Griffith and Mr. Morris Forsythe, all of Los Angeles, and Mr. C. C. Thatcher of Montebello. Dinner guests entertained at a charmingly appointed dinner Sunday by Mrs. Lillie Martin included Mr. and Mrs. D. Koons of Los Angeles, Mr. H. L. McCluskey and mother, and Mrs. Best of Minneapolis, Minn., and Mr. and Mrs. Roy Cole and son Warren, of East Whittier.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Dutcher of South Montebello was the scene of an exceptionally pleasant gathering Mondy night, the occasion being the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of the hosts. Relatives and friends to the number of forty-five participated in the happy affair.

Miss Gladys Guthrie, teacher of the seventh grade at the Greenwood School, was given a pleasant surprise Tuesday evening by her pupils, who appeared at her home in merry mood to be her guests, all uninvited, thoughtfully bringing with them a generous supply of delicious refreshments.

BURBANK.

Tuesday was reciprocity day of the Woman's Club. The meeting was held at the grammar school. Mrs. A. W. Reese, curator of the music section, had the program in charge. The out-of-town speakers were Mmes. Robert Burdette, Theo Urkhart, and the district president, Mrs. Sidney Exley. Delicious refreshments were served to the 150 guests by Mrs. Reese and her assistants.

Mrs. C. R. Crawford entertained the Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church Thursday afternoon at her home on Griswold avenue. Mmes. A. O. Kendall, William Ludlow, E. D. Line and H. R. McGuire were assistant hostesses.

Mrs. Amel Goodrich was hostess on Wednesday evening at an informal party in honor of her sister, Miss Mary Oestergard. Games and music were enjoyed until a late hour, when a buffet supper was served.

Sixteen members of the Five Hundred Club met at the home of Mrs. A. W. Rouscup of the Gerda Apartments, Wednesday afternoon, for the regular weekly meeting.

Mrs. J. C. Mathews, 905 South Hamilton avenue, entertained the Thimble Club of Loyal Neighbors, at an enjoyable meeting Friday afternoon.

Announcement of the betrothal and approaching marriage of Miss Ada Marguerite Weatherby and Ralph Martin came as a surprise to members of the Pacific Electric Social Club when the secret was revealed to them at a delightful meeting at the home of Mrs. Leo La Voy, 453 West Alvarado Court, Friday afternoon. The wedding will be an event of Wednesday, February 2.

Mr. and Mrs. James Sweet, 551 East Holt avenue, entertained with a birthday party Saturday evening, the affair having been arranged in celebration of the anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Sweet and their grandson, Waldo Smith.

Anthony Faulkner Blanks, member of the faculty of the southern branch of the University of California, addressed thet Pomona Ebell Club at the regular meeting, Friday afternoon, speaking on the topic, "O. Henry, the American." Hostesses for the day were Mmes. George W. Forester, F. W. Neidermeyer, W. S. Newton, Clyde A. Gates and A. B. Marshall.

Mr. Earl Fortney led off with an interesting paper on "Irrigation in Egypt," followed by one on "Ancient Egypt" by Miss Lillian Love. Mr. L. S. Horne spoke on "Modern Egypt," and Miss Myra Talbot on "The Customs of Egypt." The program closed with an open forum on the subject, in which nearly all present took an active part. A social hour about the open fire followed the program, accompanied by the appreciative munching of sugared popcorn.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ansley have sold their house to Mr. C. R. Howe, and have now gone to Los Angeles.

Mrs. Alice M. A. Pickler of South Dakota, has arrived in Atascadero and taken possession of her winter

BY JEANNE REDMAN.

The nucleus of a permanent opera organization is forming in Los Angeles under the leadership of W. G. Stewart, until recently managing director of the California Theater, and erstwhile opera manager in many cities of the United States.

Daily rehearsals are being held at the Gamut Auditorium, with Hans Linne as conductor. Linne was director with the Castle Square Opera Company at Chicago, and the Stewart Opera Company of the same city, when Mr. Stewart was manager of these concerns.

The opera at present being prepared is Gilbert and Sullivan's "Iolanthe." Basil Ruysdael, basso of the Metropolitan Operahouse, who has been resting here for several months, is to be one of the principals, and Irene Pavlowska is to have the soprano lead. There are fifty-six in the chorus—twenty-four men and thirty-two girls.

"The chorus is the thing," said Stewart, "and while we must have nationally known principals for our first performances, we shall gradually bring local singers into the first parts. I think that this will prove an incentive to music study here.

"Many young men and women of good voice do not find an opportunity for their talents here on the Coast, but with a permanent opera organization they should have ample inducement to study.

"This work is not new to me. I have been at it since the first production in this country of 'La Boheme,' when I created the role of Marcel. I must except one other performance—as Agostini appeared in the role of Rodolfo at the old Tivoli at San Francisco before the East saw the opera.

"You see, in those old days the West saw some operas which were not given in the East. There were many innovations offered at the Tivoli, and I am anxious to bring the West into its own again as a musical-producing center.

"We shall begin with one opera, which should run for several weeks, and by that time we shall have another ready. I shall not attempt repertoire to begin with. Gradually I shall go into grand opera.

"Only last year I produced 'Lohengrin' and 'Tannhauser' at the Capital Theater in New York, and played to 75,000 in one week. I know I can make a go of it here.

"Before we have been long at it I want the company to be able to travel. East from here on its own, and bring back some laurels.

"The chorus which I have here today is just as good as that of my Castle Square company. I am not sure yet of my tenor. A tenor is a dangerous thing, and if I cannot find the man I have in mind here I shall have to import one from New York.

SIXTY-PIECE ORCHESTRA.

"We shall have an orchestra of about sixty pieces, and that will not be difficult to find, for there are string and brass players a-plenty in Los Angeles.

"All operas will be sung in English. I did that with the Wagner operas and the Italian in New York, and they go well. Savage is still at it with success. Enunciation is a thing at which we work.

"I am satisfied that we shall draw big houses and have a wide success. I am seeking advice from Mr. Behymer and such men as are in a position to help, and without exception they look kindly upon our endeavors.

"They feel as I do that we have everything possible for the making of a permanent home for our own operas. We can easily get the scores, and, by the way, there are some works being written right here which may be acceptable.

"Charles Cadman has a light opera which has never been performed and which I now have under consideration."

The date of the opening has not been set. Stewart is on the list of speakers at the first national conference of motion pictures and musical interests which is to be held at the Astor Hotel, New York, the 24th to 26th insts. His subject is announced as "How Far a Picture Theater Should go in Allying with Other Musical Activities."

It is possible that his work here may not permit him to attend the conference, but should he go the date of the opening here will be announced upon his return to Los Angeles.

CLEVER SCOTCH COMEDY

"Bunty Pulls the Strings" at the California Today.

A nip of rare old Scotch that'll warm the cockles of your heart, is the Regionald Barker production of Graham Moffat's famous comedy, "Bunty Pulls the Strings," which Goldwyn will offer at the California beginning today.

The action of the story is larded with humor, and it is also blessed with atmosphere, novelty, drama, pathos and suspense, and promises exceptional entertainment.

At a great deal of expense the Goldwyn company erected an entire Scotch village out in Culver City and selected a cast perfectly fitting the strongly drawn characters participating in the action of the story.

It was one of the funniest and most delightful comedies ever staged, and it is promised that it has lost none of its charm and humor in its adaptation to the screen, and that it has gained much in beauty and atmosphere.

Leatrice Joy, Russell Simpson, Cullen Landis, Raymond Hatton, Casson Ferguson, Edythe Chapman, Josephine Crowell, Otto Hoffman and Sadie Gordon are among the principal players selected for the picture.

Among the many other distinctive numbers on the program are the California concert orchestra and "A Moment in Scotland," a prologue to the feature picture.

CHARLES RAY, DANDY.

Kinema Presents Him in an Absolutely New Role.

The first and important thing about Charles Ray's latest production from his own studios, "19 and Phyllis," is that Charles Ray plays the part of a young dandy instead of the awkward country boy.

But even with this change, Charlie is the same lovable Charlie, and the same characteristics that have endeared him to Kinema audiences peep out from under his slick regalia of an ambitious young fellow of 19 years in the kind of a town where dances are the rage with the younger set.

In his latest Kinema attraction, Ray has two passions—clothes and Phyllis—and both come near ruining him. There is a certain appeal to every man—or perhaps, to every boy—in this latest of the Charles Ray cinemas. It assuredly recalls the first days of developing self-regard for one's personality, when the first love and the first sweetheart were more important than the course of the universe.

Clara Horton plays opposite Ray in this production.

The Kinema program is further enhanced by Jack White's two-reel comedy, "High and Dry," and by a ballet, "Oriental Splendor."

ORPHEUM BOOKE POPULAR STARS.

The Orpheum continues to book up popular stars. Among those shortly to be seen here are Alice Lloyd, June Elvidge and Julian Eltinge.

Miss Lloyd, who, in private life, is Mrs. Tom McCaughton, was compelled to cancel her Orpheum tour last year on account of having to take her husband, who was ill, home to England, where she nursed him for several months. His recovery releases her for the coming tour.

June Elvidge, former picture star, recently embarked on a vaudeville tour, and Julian Eltinge has abandoned pictures for the two-a-day.

REALISTIC FISTICUFFS.

Two real "he-man" fights fall to the lot of Will Rogers, starring in "Guile of Women" at the Alhambra Theater. He is called upon to vanquish Bert Sprotte and Lionel Belmore, both exceptionally heavy men, and weightier than Rogers himself. When the fight with Belmore was finished both men were reduced to a state of weakness and perspiration. "And then they say we don't work," exclaimed Rogers. "If I had three fights like this in this picture instead of the two I'd spend the rest of the year in the hospital."

"WHY CHANGE YOUR WIFE"

The latest, and most daring production, featuring the popular favorite in a de luxe cinema entertainment so unusually brilliant that the Symphony takes pleasure in announcing this screen play of caste.

It is an expose of the high lights of modern society, and contains that elusive "something ultra-smart" of delicacy, charm and high dramatic power.

Especially adapted to this most beautiful star.

The attraction at the Mason starting next Sunday night will be those two kings of comedy, Kolb and Dill, in their success, "The High Cost of Loving." The show is cast with a capable company and a chorus of singing girls, and a jazz orchestra, under the direction of Leo Flanders, plus the two stars themselves. This will be the only engagement of Kolb and Dill here, as their tour is limited.

NEW VOGUE FOR THE CLASSICS?

It is a play that appeals chiefly to the feminine audience.

"Hamlet" and "Lear" attracted large attendances. In fact "Lear" enjoyed a capacity house. Still neither of these magnificent subjective studies possessed the power to capture the general attention like the more obivous dramatic wealth of "Macbeth" and "Julius Caesar."

Mere details of the attitude toward individual plays aside, it is amply proven by the Mantell season that the public wants the classic drama, verse or no verse, and, above all, they want Shakespeare. Incidentally they demand chiefly the Shakespeare that they know.

The pendulum has taken time to swing back from frothy entertainment. But it has swung.

A public wearied by an endless sequence of bedroom farces and musical plays has found that real thought, garbed in beauty of word, and with people schooled in the art of elocution, as well as acting, giving life to the drama, are worthier of appreciation, besides living a greater and truer delight.

Mantell's supporting company could have been a great deal better, just as it could have been much worse. Some of the members read their lines with unusual intelligence, while others seemed to do everything in their power to banish the meaning.

Mantell himself is not above criticism as to his rendering of many passages. His haste is extreme, and many words are lost in jumbled syllables. There is an element of carelessness in this.

However, power to visualize his characters through make-up and action, his eloquence in the more sublime moments of a Shakespearean work—above all his ability to give reality and distinction to each portrayal, made his every appearance on the stage a potent and magnetic triumph.

PALACE THEATER WILL DISCONTINUE.

"Who's to Blame?" is to close this evening at the Palace Theater. At the same time the house will be closed permanently, on account of the expiration of the lease, it is announced.

"Who's to Blame?" deals in an unusually frank manner with social problems and points out the injustice toward the wronged woman. The story was written by Wycliffe A. Hill, president of the Photoplaywrights' League of America. Edward Coxen and Enid Markey are the featured players.

GUESTS OF MANTELL.

Mrs. George A. Dobinson, dramatic reader and interpreter of Shakespeare, and Miss Mary Alpaugh were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Mantell the past two weeks at the Mason. The Mantells presented Mrs. Dobinson with autographed pictures representing them in their Shakespearean portrayals of this season. The pcitures will be exhibited publicly at a later date with Mrs. Dobinson's collection of theatrical mementos.

ANNOUNCE ENGAGEMENT.

Announcement was made yesterday of the engagement of Ruth King, daughter of William King, well-known scenario writer, and herself author of a number of scenarios, to Ted Taylor, publicity writer. The pair will be married early in March, and will take a honeymoon trip, after which they will reside in a Hollywood bungalow. Miss Wing will continue her work of writing stories for the films, and Mr. Taylor will keep on making film folk famous.

AUTHORS BUSY AT GOLDWYN'S.

Nearly All Eminents Are Working at Studio.

Mary Roberts Rinehart Will Arrive Today.

Rita Weiman and Others Are Added to Roster.

From all appearances, there is a regular convention of authors these days at the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation studios. Nearly all the Eminents are now among those present, and practically all of them are busy on original scenarios.

The arrival today of Mary Roerts Rinehart will add another to the distinguished aggregation. Mrs. Rinehart has studied technique at the studios before, but this is her first visit in several months. Her last picture, "It's a Great Life," was one of the most amusing comedies of the year.

Rita Weiman, playwright and novelist, who has just signed a contract to write original photoplays for Goldwyn, stepped from a New York train (yesterday. She is already at work on an original screen story to be called "The Grim Comedian."

Miss Weiman wrote "The Acquittal," one of the most successful stage plays of last season in New York. She is also the author of "Madame Peacock," starring Nazimova, and of "Curtain," featuring Katherine McDonald.

An arrival earlier in the week was Katherine Newlin Burt, whose latest novel, "Snow Blind," has just been filmed under the direction of Reginald Barker. Mr. Barker also directed her other story, "The Branding Iron." Mrs. Burt is accompanied by her husband, Maxwell Struthers Burt, poet, essayist and short story writer. She is now writing an original.

Alice Duer Miller, who was recently placed under contract by Mr. Goldwyn, will journey to the land of make-believe to weave stories first hand. Some of her recent stories are "The Modern Obstacle," "The Charm School," "Ladies Must Live" and "Are Women People?" In addition to her literary activity, Mrs. Miller is also prominent as a suffrage worker.

Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Burt and Miss Weiman are recent acquisitions to the Goldwyn roster. Other celebrities who have been won over to the newest of the arts and who are now giving their efforts to the screen are Gertrude Atherton, Rupert Hughes, Basil King, Gouverneur, Morris and Leroy Scott. All of these, with the exception of Mr. King, are now at the studio.

MANY ORIGINALS.

The photography has just been finished on the first original photoplays written by three of these authors. Mrs. Atherton's is called "Don't Neglect Your Wife" and has been elaborately made under the direction of Wallace Worsley, with the cast headed by Mabel Julienne Scott and Lewis S. Stone.

Rupert Hughes's first story written directly for the screen was originally called "Mr. and Miserable Jones," but now answers to the name of "Dangerous Curve Ahead." It is a domestic comedy said to possess many new effects, conceived by the author. Helene Chadwick is featured in the cast; E. Mason Hooper directed.

Gouverneur Morris's contribution is "A Tale of Two Worlds," a romantic love story with a Chinese background. It is a Frank Lloyd production with Leatrice Joy in the leading role.

Leroy Scott, who has been here for several weeks, has just finished his first original photoplay, "The Night Rose," which is being put into celluloid under the guidance of Wallace Worsley with Leatrice Joy and Lon Chaney at the head of the cast.

Regarding his attitude toward the place which writers should occupy in the production of pictures, Samuel Goldwyn said yesterday:

"We want our authors to give the same time and care to their photoplays as they give to their books and spoken plays. Progressive writers have come to realize that the screen furnishes a distinct medium of artistic expression as varied and powerful as that of the written page or spoken play."

It is significant that men and women of such undoubted literary standing have turned their attention to the formerly despised "movies." In response to a request, Mary Roberts Rinehart yesterday telegraphed this statement:

"The motion-picture has taken its place among the solid institutions of life. It is an art stable as the theater, but with all the world, with no barrier of languages, as its audience."

Rupert Hughes made this interesting comment:

"An author who refuses to accept the motion picture as a medium for conveying his ideas to the public is like a business man who will not use the telegraph or telephone."

"HUSH!"

Clara Kimball Young in Strong Story at Symphony.

In "Hush," the Clara Kimball Young feature, which starts at the Symphony today, and which is the second of the big films which the Symphony is presenting in keeping with their new policy to show the biggest and the best, Miss Young has the part of a young wife who, believing that her past life is her own, conceals it from her husband, and then, in a burst of confidence, thinking that by so doing she insures her own future happiness, tells him what she has done.

Sada Cowan, who wrote "Why Change Your Wife," wrote especially for Miss Young the story "Hush," and in the vehicle the actress has been provided, it is said, with one of the most dynamic screen stories of her career

The settings are among the most lavish of any in which Miss Young has ever appeared.

In the assisting cast are Kathlyn Williams, J. Frank Glendon, Bertram Grassby and Gerard Alexander.

BURBANK ANNOUNCES SCANDALOUS REVIEW.

Ed Armstrong and his company of seventy-five, including the famous "Thirty-six Baby Dolls," will present their latest musical comedy review, "Town Scandal," at the Burbank this week.

"Town Scandal" is heralded as a giant of reviews. It is built in seven real scenes, each containing some particularly newsy bit of tomfoolery concerning Los Angeles in especial, but referring to no personality in particular.

It was written and staged by Ed Armstrong, who is also appearing in the leading comedy role. In the various scenes, new song numbers, dances and specialties will be introduced by the various principals of the company.

FAMOUS CANINE STAR AT NEW PANTAGES.

His doglets, "Teddy," the famous comedy canine film star, will headline the bill and present his own ideas in "Barkology," at New Pantages this week.

The next big noise will be a crew of husky young gloom-destroyers, answering the roll call as the "Jazz Naval Eight."

Carl Rosine offers "Illusions," Irene Trevette is billed as "The Italian Nightingale," Zara Carmen trio exemplify grace and strength, and La Pine and Emery conclude the vaudeville with "Whatnots."

Carmel Meyers stars in the Universal film feature, "Beautifully Trimmed," and a Christie comedy adds another note of jazz to the proceedings.

"THE GILDED CAGE" BEINS SIXTH WEEK.

"The Gilded Cage" enters the sixth week with today's performance at the Morosco.

This comedy drama is proving one of the sensations of many seasons. It is predicted by well informed persons that it will score a tremendous triumph in New York when produced there next fall.

The play is built around the life of a notorious French actress, for love of whom a certain young king lost his crown a few years ago. The authoress has ingeniously woven into the play actual incidents in the life of this famous woman. The interest of the play is that it reveals the secret life of the great actress, that life which has been hidden from the general public.

Bertha Mann and Henry Duffey are in the two principal roles. They are well supported by the other members of the Morosco company.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—Everybody with a tongue that can waggle, discusses only one topic in New York these days—the cataclysm in the movies. It has been variously described as a panic, a slump and a collapse. As a matter of fact it is none of these, but only a good strong dose of Wall street in the studios.

The movies are being brought down to a sane dollar basis, that's all. The moneyed interests that have lately been drawn into the studios are insisting that the enormous salaries be cut down—that queer, ignorant little child directors, just able to read and write a little, shall no longer draw salaries five and six times the size of that of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Out of the general fracas a few facts seem to stand out. About half the stars will be unstarred, so to speak, for the reason that they are not legitimately stars. The situation was aptly if naively expressed the other night at a motion-picture ball when I heard a movie magnate say to an assistant, "Where's that girl that I'm going to make a star? I never can remember her name."

There will always be stars. The public demands heroes, but they will be stars who have won the public love and not ambitious young ladies made to order by lusty press agents.

Another fact outstanding is that the movies will probably be better when they start up again on a new deal. They could not very well be worse. The sane, cool, financial minds now backing the films have been quick to see that the quality must be improved.

There are not more than half a dozen directors who can tell a story in pictures, and most of the time even these can't do it any too well.

Most of those now in the movie business will be gently excused from further attendance. So also will most of the stars.

Among the thousands of people whose activities have been suspended by the crash are two women who are to me the most interesting actresses who have ever been on the screen—Lillian Gish and Theda Bara.

Miss Gish has been left with a half-finished play on her hands by the bankruptcy of the Frohman Amusement Company. She has two or three offers from different film companies and also has an offer to go on the speaking stage.

Miss Theda Bara couldn't stand "The Blue Flame" in which she was touring the country and has come home to New York to return to pictures. Should she get a real chance, I do not know to what heights Theda Bara might not rise.

Her whole career has been handicapped by an unspeakably stupid combination of a vulgar and ignorant management, an inartistic series of dirctors and a press department which apparently started life in an asylum for the feebleminded. Theda Bara's career is one of the bitter tragedies of the screen.

They made a fool of her by putting her out disguised first as an Egyptian princess, then as a freak mystic and finally as a lady without any clothes in "Cleopatra."

HER REAL SELF.

You who read this would get the shock of your life should you meet Theda Bara who is spoken of always with a snicker. She is nothing to snicker at. On the contrary she is the most brilliant woman I ever met. She is a marvelous and golden talker. She has charm and poise and humor, and a wonderfully well-stored and finely-educated mind.

To the physiognomist her face is the face of a great artist. Her eyes are the eyes of a mystic and a psychic. You can't tell their color, and they have queer depths. She has a mouth of emotion and feeling and her nose, with its sensitive nostrils, its square tip with a tiny cleft in the center, bespeaks an artistic taste and subtle discrimination. Besides, it possesses the little droop and thin Napoleonic curve that always goes with brilliance and intellectual power of the nose distinguishing great artists from time immemorial.

If they ever stop kidding her and give this girl a real chance I often wonder to what heights she might not rise. The only difficulty is, she probably will not get the chance. Her bonehead friends too effectually killed her.

NEW PICKFORD FILM.

Mary Pickford's photoplay, "The Love Light," which is filling the enormous Capital Theater every night, is the most interesting theatrical event of the week in New York. The fact that it is Mary's first real splash into tragedy and that it was directed and written by a girl—Frances Marion—give it additional interest.

In many ways it is a gorgeously fine piture but I think there was too much girl in the making of it. The story is complicated with femininity. It lacks a certain masculine drive in narrative. It tends to lose itself in the telling. Miss Pickford could never be other than a great artist in everything she touches, and so she gets her newly attempted tragedy over with a fine touch, but still not as well as her comedy. There never was and I don't believe there ever will be her equal on the screen as a light comedian. And every year seems to bring new loveliness to her face. She will make a big fortune out of "The Love Light."

Another photoplay that is attracting a great deal of attention in New York is Ina Claire in "Polly With A Past." I could enjoy it if I hadn't heard that they paid $75,000 for the piffle which forms the basis of the story. With what strength yet remains in my fainting form I beckon to the Wall street money reformers

It seems that another outburst of wild animal pictures is upon us.

They have begun to show a series illustrating the life of the wild African tribes at the Rivoli on Broadway, and another firm is about to release the pictures taken some time ago in Africa by Lady Constance Mackenzie.

This adventurous young Scottish peeress spent $500,000 and a couple of years in hot pursuit of the wildest motion picture adventure over undertaken. I have seen a preview of her pictures. There are evidences of some escapes that make your hair stand on end. In one place a lion comes charging out of the donga, knocks the huntress down and bounds right into the camera, knocking it over.

When it comes to African pictures, this seems to be the supreme thrill.

Pola Negri, the beautiful Polish countess, who made such a hit as Dubarry in "Passion" is coming to America to work, I undestand, for the Famous Players Company. She is to get $5,000 a week with a $500 weekly expense account which ought to help starving Poland some.

"YANKEE" IS PRIZE KIDDER.

"Some of our best Broadway actors are graduates of 'rep.' The only real difference between me and them is—I admit it."

Myers's first big part was as Charlie Anguish in "Graustark," in which he played throughout the East, scoring a hit. Then he went into pictures with the Lubin company, staying with them five years, but grew so heavy that he wasn't cast for leads after a while, and to reduce, went down to San Antonio and worked four months as a cowboy.

He hadn't intended to stay so long, but enjoyed the life.

Then a Universal company coming south to make a picture and needing his type, he joined, playing leads, until one day he wrote a light comedy called "Baby," in which he appeared and President Laemmle, from that time on, ordered he play only that sort of parts.

Afterward he was in Vim comedies; then appeared in vaudeville; later went back into pictures and came to California, where he appeared under Christy Cabanne's direction. Afterward he played in a Frothingham production with Bessie Barriscale, and still later heavies with Charles Ray.

And then came his great chance as "The Yankee."

But even in telling of that he needs must kid.

"Emmet Flynn had a grouch on all the time we were making the picture. I don't believe he ever could really see me in the part. He used to say, 'For heaven's sake stop clowning, and act!'

"Everybody else was running around all dressed up and with all their eye paint and lips on, and every time Flynn looked at me he'd have a duck fit. I just didn't belong to the outfit. I was only the star walking around playing the part.

"Charlie Clary was every inch a king. He got to kinging around one day, and accidentally threw out his arm and knocked me right out of the scene.

"I picked myself up and said to Mr. Flynn, 'I'm in this scene, ain't I, Mr. Flynn?'

"He said, 'Why, certainly!' So I crawled back into the camera lines.

"I'll never forget how all the company acted when I came out with my Boss suit on. I had my legs lily-white, and Clary said, 'You look like Shuberts's best show girl!' "

Naturally Mr. Myers has received a number of offers since he registered his big hit in "The Yankee," at Miller's, but so far he hasn't signed a contract.

If It Excites You to Know It—

Roscoe Arbuckle, looking fit as a daisy, plans to start work next week at the Lasky studio on Frank Condon's story, "Three Miles Out," directed by James Cruze. No, even though he has just come from Paris, Fatty will not stage a fashion show.

Elinor Glyn's first original picture scenario has been titled "The Great Moment." Just when that will be I don't know, but possibly it's when the rattlesnake bites the lady on the desert.

At the showing of Charlie Chaplin's picture, "The Kid," at the Goldwyn studio, May Collins was present. She sat with Mr. Chaplin and told him she was in "The Bridal Path."

Another famous English author, Joseph Conrad, has signed a contract to write original stories for Paramount. He promises not to write any Wild Westerns, for awhile, anyhow.

Eric Von Stroheim denies that after filming "Blind Husbands" and "Foolish Wives" he means to make "The Foundling."

Mary Roberts Rinehart will arrive in Los Angeles tomorrow to join the group of distinguished writers who are at present penning stories for Goldwyn. Mrs. Rinehart's last story was entitled "It's a Great Life," but it is not known whether the title refers to the fate of the Eminent Authors.

It may be neither here nor there, but Albert Prisco, now playing with Florence Lawrence in "The Unfoldment," was brought from Italy to America to play "Discovering America" on the stage, and as soon as prohibition went into effect he played the leading role in "The Inner Man."

FITZIU REGISTERS TRIUMPH IN "FAUST."

Not in many days have operagoers in Los Angeles been made more aware, not only of the musical beauty, but also of the inherent drama of "Faust," than was that capacity audience which assembled Thursday at Philharmonic to listen to Gounod's famous work. This despite some physical mishaps, such as the too apparent transition of "Faust" in the first act.

While Anna Fitziu naturally does not fulfill the traditional ideal of the slender Marguerite, this becomes a small matter in comparison with her exquisite vocal expression of the role and the manner in which she sustained the spirit of the part, from the first moment of virginal unself-consciousness, to that of passionate self-surrender to the love springing from irresistible, primitive impulses.

A remarkably brilliant performance of Valentino was given by Vincente Ballester, who combines dramatic fire and initiative with a marvelously beautiful baritone voice. No greater applause has been given any singer throughout this operatic season than he received at the close of his rendering of the beautiful "Dio Possente."

The Mephistopheles of Pietro De Biasi, while perhaps lacking in dash and fire, was nevertheless finely effective both in acting and singing. The Faust of Pilada Sinagra was adequate, though his being shorter in stature than Miss Fitziu was unfortunate. He was in very good voice.

May Barron was a delightful Siebel, and Alice Homer pleased in the role of Martha.

"MIDSUMMER MADNESS" CONTINUES AT RIALTO.

William DeMille's "Midsummer Madness" begins is second week at Grauman's Rialto today.

The unusual theme, handled in such a capable manner by Mr. De Mille, is strengthened by the acting of Lois Wilson, Lila Lee, Conrad Nagel and Jack Holt.

The picture is completing the triumph of Cosmo Hamilton's "His Friend and His Wife," the book from which it was adapted.

A special musical program has been arranged by Oliver Wallace, organist, and Hermann Seidl, conductor of the Grauman Rialto Orchestra.

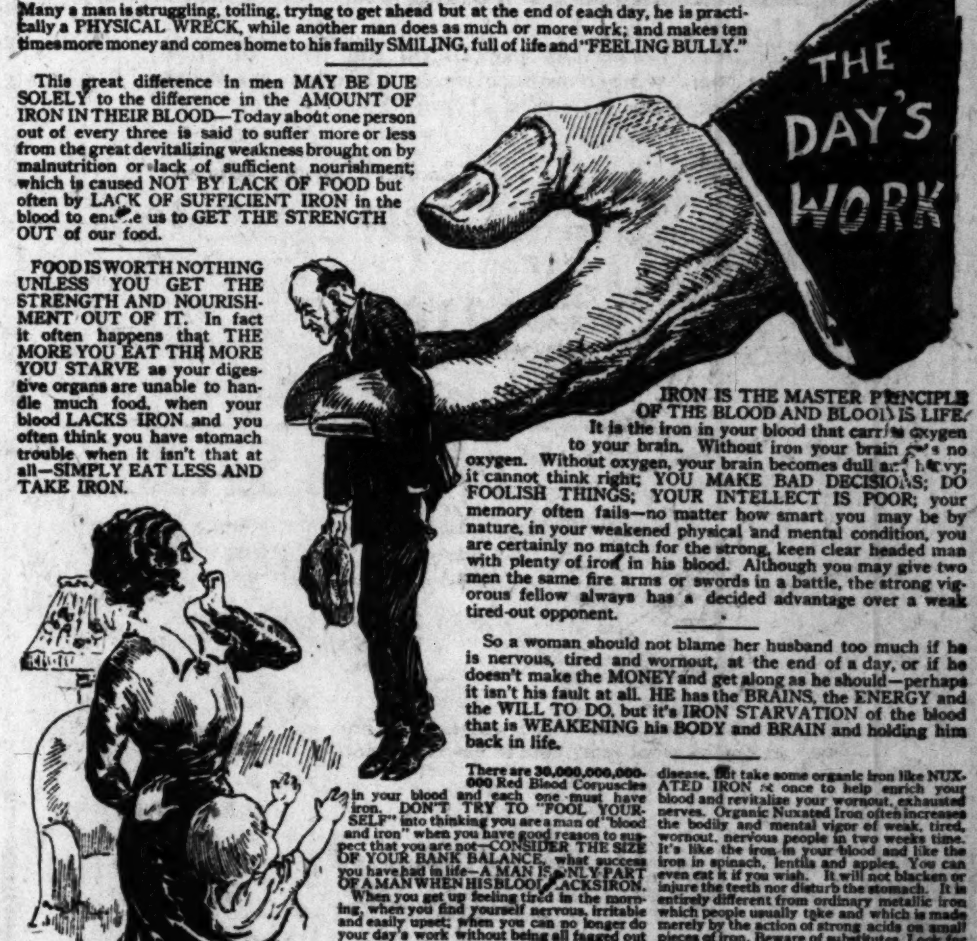
Here Is Your Husband
What is left of him—
When The Days Work Is Over
I've got his strength, his SMILE, and the VIM with which he started the day.

Many a man is struggling, toiling, trying to get ahead but at the end of each day, he is practically a PHYSICAL WRECK, while another man does as much or more work; and makes ten times more money and comes home to his family SMILING, full of life and "FEELING BULLY."



This great difference in men MAY BE DUE SOLELY to the difference in the AMOUNT OF IRON IN THEIR BLOOD—Today about one person out of every three is said to suffer more or less from the great devitalizing weakness brought on by malnutrition or lack of sufficient nourishment; which is caused NOT BY LACK OF FOOD but often by LACK OF SUFFICIENT IRON in the blood to enable us to GET THE STRENGTH OUT of our food.

FOOD IS WORTH NOTHING UNLESS YOU GET THE STRENGTH AND NOURISHMENT OUT OF IT. In fact it often happens that THE MORE YOU EAT THE MORE YOU STARVE as your digestive organs are unable to handle much food, when your blood LACKS IRON and you often think you have stomach trouble when it isn't that at all—SIMPLY EAT LESS AND TAKE IRON.

IRON IS THE MASTER PRINCIPLE OF THE BLOOD AND BLOOD IS LIFE. It is the iron in your blood that carries oxygen to your brain. Without iron your brain gets no oxygen. Without oxygen, your brain becomes dull and heavy; it cannot think right; YOU MAKE BAD DECISIONS; DO FOOLISH THINGS; YOUR INTELLECT IS POOR; your memory often fails—no matter how smart you may be by nature, in your weakened physical and mental condition, you are certainly no match for the strong, keen clear headed man with plenty of iron in his blood. Although you may give two men the same fire arms or swords in a battle, the strong vigorous fellow always has a decided advantage over a weak tired-out opponent.

So a woman should not blame her husband too much if he is nervous, tired and wornout, at the end of a day, or if he doesn't make the MONEY and get along as he should—perhaps it isn't his fault at all. HE has the BRAINS, the ENERGY and the WILL TO DO, but it's IRON STARVATION of the blood that is WEAKENING his BODY and BRAIN and holding him back in life.

There are 30,000,000,000,000 Red Blood Corpuscles in your blood and each one must have iron. DON'T TRY TO "FOOL YOURSELF" into thinking you are a man of "blood and iron" when you have good reason to suspect that you are not—CONSIDER THE SIZE OF YOUR BANK BALANCE, what success you have had in life—A MAN IS ONLY PART OF A MAN WHEN HIS BLOOD LACKS IRON.

When you get up feeling tired in the morning, when you find yourself nervous, irritable and easily upset; when you can no longer do your day's work without being all fagged out at night; or have pains across the back and your face looks pale and drawn do not wait until you go all to pieces and collapse in a state of nervous prostration or until in your weakened condition you contract some serious disease, but take some organic iron like NUXATED IRON at once to help enrich your blood and revitalize your wornout, exhausted nerves. Organic Nuxated Iron often increases the bodily and mental vigor of weak, tired, wornout, nervous people in two weeks time. It's like the iron in your blood and like the iron in spinach, lentils and apples. You can even eat it if you wish. It will not blacken or injure the teeth nor disturb the stomach. It is entirely different from ordinary metallic iron which people usually take and which is made merely by the action of strong acids on small pieces of iron. Beware of substitutes. Look for the word "NUXATED" on every package and the letters N. I. on every tablet. Your money will be refunded by the manufacturers if you do not obtain perfectly satisfactory results. At all druggists.

SANTA MONICA.

Miss Marian Elizabeth Schermerhorn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Schermerhorn of 703 Washington avenue, Santa Monica, was married Wednesday evening to Dr. Clarence Wells of Los Angeles, at the home of her parents. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Baker Lee of Los Angeles. Attending the bride was Miss Jessie Agnue. The bridegroom was Mr. Donald Kaeppler. Little Misses Marian Kurrent and Jennie Bevis were flower girls. Master John Kurrent was ring bearer. The Lewis orchestra played the wedding march. The bride was given away by her father. Following the wedding a reception was held for 100 guests, after which the bride and groom departed on their honeymoon. Mrs. Wells was educated at Chevy Chase Seminary, Washington. The Schermerhorn family is well known throughout the State. Dr. Wells is a prominent young physician of Los Angeles.

In addition to the general glad welcome that Santa Monica clubdom offered Miss Adelaide Ramsey on her return from a sojourn at Hawaii, the largest crowd that ever gathered at a meeting of the book and travel section of the Santa Monica Bay Woman's Club met Tuesday afternoon to hear her describe in sparkling, spontaneous language her adventures and observations. She spoke as the result of the efforts of Mrs. H. La Salle Aldrich, chairman of the book and travel section. By just such discrimination as she exercised in selecting Miss Ramsey, has Mrs. Aldrich made her section popular, and a source for culture and restfulness.

Glints, tints and undertones

That beautiful sheen and glow, those glints, tints and undertones of rich color so entrancing in the hair of women of fashion, may be yours, too. Until Cinderella Golden Glint was introduced, these precious qualities were indeed a rare gift. This shampoo vivifies the glints and tints—livens up dull, dark shadows, without changing the color of the hair or injuring it in any way. Visit your hairdresser if you can—enjoy the delights of a

The Doctor's Advice

by Dr. Lewis Baker

"[illegible]" writes: "I suffer with rheumatism all the time and I shall be very glad if you can tell me something to [illegible] me."

Answer: I can give you a prescription which will not only relieve, but [illegible] obliterate your rheumatism. This is my favorite remedy and from the number of letters received from people who have used it proves its value in rheumatism. The following is made by mixing well, taking a teaspoonful at meal times and again before retiring: Comp. essence Cardiol, 1 oz.; comp. fluid Balmwort, 1 oz.; syrup Sarsaparilla comp., 4 ozs.; iodide of potassium, 2 drams; wine of colchicum, one-half ounce; sodium salicylate, 4 drams.

"A. C. B." writes: "I am seeking some safe method to reduce my flesh. While my frame is large I am getting too fat, and, of course, it is embarrassing."

Answer: For many years I have placed reliance in the formula known as Arbolone tablets packed in sealed tubes with full directions for home use. Some have reduced as much as forty pounds in a few weeks.

"[illegible]" asks: "I am constipated, tongue coated, have headache, dizzy spells and indigestion sometimes. Please advise?"

Answer: I advise that you begin using Sulpherb tablets (not sulphur). These tablets are laxative, act on the liver, kidneys and bowels and tend to keep the blood pure, by arousing the eliminative functions. Relief should follow quickly.

"[illegible]" writes: "I have pains in my spine and frightful headache in back of head, fainting spells, twitching and trembling, nervousness, sleeplessness, loss of appetite and strength, and in fact am a 'has been,' when it comes to performing accustomed work and duties."

Answer: In all such cases the assimilative functions have not kept pace with waste functions and a powerful [illegible] tonic treatment is needed. I find Cadomene tablets unexcelled and astonishingly beneficial in such cases and advise them for you.

"Jane" says: "Some time ago I contracted a very severe cold and cough. I have tried many remedies, but they do not seem to help me at all. I wish you would advise me what to do."

Answer: What you need is a laxative cough syrup, one that will drive the cold from your system. The following prescription will check your cold and cough: Get a 2½-oz. package of concentrated essence Mentho-Laxene and make according to directions on the bottle.

Celia asks: "My hair is too oily and my scalp itches with dandruff, and of late it is combing out too much. What is a good treatment?"

Answer: Obtain plain yellow Minyol from your druggist in 4-oz. jars and apply as per directions. This cleans, purifies, cools and invigorates the hair and scalp, thus stopping the death of the hair. Dandruff and itching are at once relieved. Men and women all over the country now use it regularly.

"Worried" writes: "Have been doctoring for kidney trouble and now want your advice. Frequent desire is followed by burning pain and am very tender and sore over region of bladder. Also backache affects me dreadfully. Can hardly move when I awake in the morning. Weakness, too, is a symptom."

Answer: I think if you will take Balmwort tablets regularly for a few weeks your kidneys and bladder will become normal and such symptoms vanish. This is unequalled for such complaints in my estimation.

Miss Margaret Chase entertained for a number of her young friends at a delightful affair held at her home on West Nineteenth street. Those who shared the evening socially were Misses Mildred Richley, Lucy Altona, Irma Rayburn, Gladys Walker, Alpha Connelly, Clara Petterson, Grace Bird; Dr. and Mrs. Joe Smith, Messrs. Charles Green, Dwight Griffith, Hugh Jewett, Frederick Tredway and Cecil Chase.

Bakersfield Scots entertained the members and friends, and Masons and their ladies at one of the pleasant dancing parties Friday evening, at Bakersfield Garage ballroom. A reception committee composed of W. Alexander, Tom Burke and C. A. Hare promoted a social atmosphere by getting everybody acquainted.

DEDICATED TO BETTER HOMES

The Honest Value Policy of the "California" Is Asserted in the Revised Price Levels

Although the "California" does not indulge in so-called special sales, yet the "California" does mark its merchandise on a basis that anticipates and welcomes value comparisons.

On the other hand it is not ordinarily the home furnishings of the character such as you find at the "California" that are offered at reduced or so-called special prices.

The "California's" announcement therefore of a means a great deal more to the prospective home furnisher than the same announcement would logically mean from the average store.

20% Downward Revision of All Prices

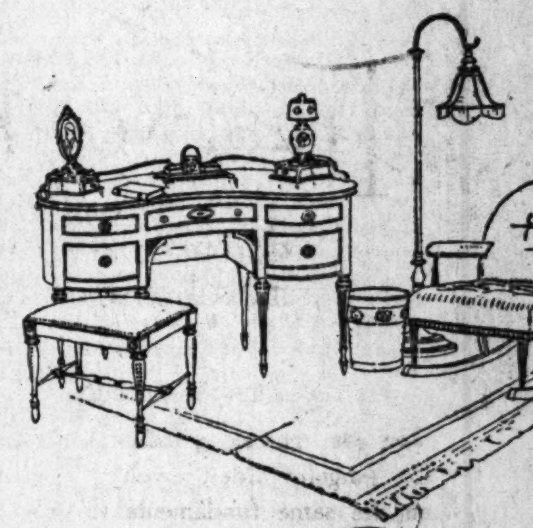
First of all—the "California's" prices are probably lower to begin with. They are not marked with any intent to make reductions later. On the contrary they are marked to bear comparison with prices that are proclaimed as "reductions."

There are but few houses in all America which show such unusual, carefully selected home furnishings as are constantly presented at the "California." And yet, you can come here today and buy anything in the "California's" stocks at a full 20% less than regular marked prices. In many cases the new prices are lower than we could sell the same merchandise for under today's replacement costs, and it is the expressed judgment of responsible authorities that the low level has been reached.

So now is the time to buy home furnishings while present stocks are available, for if present stocks can not be replaced to sell at present prices then prices will be higher instead of lower.

Everything in the "California's" stocks is included in the 20% reduction. All furniture and accessories, all carpets and rugs, all draperies and curtains, and all wall papers. But even the 20% reduction does not give you a proper conception of the values offered.



Feel free to come and make value comparisons.

Mrs. Laura J. Bunnell has arrived from New Richmond, Ind., to visit her sisters, Mrs. Fred C. Clark and Mrs. D. L. Hoenshell of Bakersfield. She expects to spend most of the winter in this State.

Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Tarpley have as their guests, Mr. Tarpley's mother, Mrs. Alice Tarpley, and granddaughter, Miss Mabel Ruhlen, of Los Gatos.

Mr. and Mrs. James Taylor presided at dinner at their home on Truxton avenue, Saturday evening. Dancing and cards furnished the evening's diversion, Mrs. Frank Sweeney and A. Monroe being prize winners at the five hundred tables.

WHITTIER.

In celebration of the fifty-fourth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Beaver, a number of their friends assembled at their home, 232 North Pickering avenue, Monday evening. The affair was in the nature of a surprise for the Beavers and was planned by the members of the Brotherhood Bible class of the First Methodist Church of which Mr. Beaver is a member. The men were accompanied by their wives. An informal program was presented by Mr. Alexander Murphy and consisted of songs and stories told by those present. A gift of a set of solid silver spoons was presented by Mr. A. Moore on behalf of the class. A collation was served.

One of the merriest of the midwinter dancing parties which the social section of the woman's club stands sponsor for, was that on Friday evening when Mrs. Harry Hazzard, one of the popular young matrons, was hostess. Assisting Mrs. Hazzard in receiving and entertaining were the Mmes. Frank Swain, Manning Siemon, Benton, Carl Cowdery, McClay Gardner, Gwynn Hopkins, Scott, J. Clem Arnold and Miss Pellerin. Patrons and patronesses were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Keasbey, Mr. and Mrs. Gurney Maple and Dr. and Mrs. B. F. Miller. Mrs. W. F. Blaich and Mrs. Addison Gurley issued the guest cards.

To announce the betrothal of two popular Whittier college students, namely, Miss Marion Morgan and Mr. Gerald Kepple, an attractive party was given at the home of Miss Morgan in Monrovia Saturday afternoon. The secret was cleverly disclosed by the unique table decorations at the luncheon served. Metalized fern leaves bore the inscription "Marion and Gerald" and in the center of the table an Eskimo hut was placed, in miniature, and roses scattered about, indicating the connection between Alaska and California, for it is to the far north the young couple will journey on their honeymoon trip. Both young people have been very popular at Whittier, entering into many of the social and athletic affairs of the school. Whittier guests at the party were the Misses Helen and Maria Walker, Kathryn Veale, Josihepn890$..ta Kathryn Veale, Josephine Gidley, Josephine Gibbs, Beatrice Smith, Esther Lewis, Evelyn Greene, Schell Morgan and Clara Crawford. ORCHESTRAL EVENTS.

PHILHARMONIC POPULAR AND SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Embracing compositions by Haydn, so often referred to as "the father of the symphony;" Franz Liszt and Richard Wagner, the sixth pair of symphony concerts by the Philharmonic Orchestra will afford a pleasurable diversity Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Philharmonic Auditorium.

Soloist will be Olga Steeb, the accomplished pianist, who resides in this city, though engaging concert tours through the East during the winter season. She has achieved success both in America and abroad. Her recent New York recitals have been particularly acclaimed.

Miss Steeb will play the Concerto in E flat by Liszt with the orchestra.

The other numbers on the program will include the Symphony in G major, "Oxford" by Haydn, Liszt's symphonic poem, "Orpheus," and the overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser."

At the popular concert this afternoon Walter V. Ferner, cellist, and member of the Noack String Quartette, will be soloist, playing the Variations Symphonique for his instrument and orchestra by Boellman. Orchestral numbers include March from "Tannhauser" (Wagner;) Allegretto from Symphony in D minor (Franck;) Ballet Music from "Herodiade" (Massenet;) Danse Slave (Chabrier;) "A Night in Lisbon" (Saint-Saens;) Intermezzo (Liadow;) Pizzicato Polka from Ballet "Sylvia" (Delibes,) and "Norwegian Artists' Carnival" (Svendsen.) The Saint-Saens composition will be played for the first time at these concerts, and the Liadow Intermezzo will be performed for the first time in this city.

Buhlig Recital Soon.

Richard Buhlig, the pianist, will present his program of classic and modern compositions the 25th inst. at Trinity Auditorium. This will be his first solo recital locally, although he is well known to the musical public through his lectures and appearance with the Philharmonic Orchestra.

He will open a Bach Prelude and Fugue, followed by Liszt's Sonata in B minor, and selections from the works of Debussy, Scriabine and De Falla, of the modern Spanish school.

Woman's Orchestra.

With a membership of fifty, the Woman's Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Henry Schoenfeld, will present their first concert of the season as part of the entertainment signalizing the formal opening of the Ambassador Hotel Tuesday. Their concert will be given in the afternoon.

The program is as follows: Overture, "Rosamunde" (Schubert;) "Praeludium" (Jaernefelt;) Nocturne, "California" (Schoenfeld,) for flute, cello and strings, Minnie V. Percival Jones, Lucy Fuhrer Genter; "Serenade Espagnol" (Schoenefeld,) string orchestra; Adagio from Fourth Symphony (Schumann;) Gypsy Songs, Suite (Dvorak;) "Ballet Russe" (Luigini;) valse (Czardas.)

Quartet Featured.

Misha Guterson's string quartet will be heard again this morning in the feature number on the Grauman popular concert program. The quartet is headed by Mr. Guterson, with G. Stollberg as second violin; Josef Rosenfeld, viola, and M. G. Elsoff, cello. They will play the Nocturne from Borodin's second quartet.

The orchestral program is to include the overture to "Der Freischutz (Weber,) Prelude to the "Deluge" (Saint-Saens,) with violin obligato by Jaime Overton, concert master; selections from "Aida" (Verdi,) and Chopin's Military Polonaise.

"Marche Slav."

Tschaikowsky's "Marche Slav" will be the principal selection played by the Kinema Theater orchestra under the direction of Rene A. Williams, this week. A stage picture will be presented to harmonize with the dramatic music.

At Community Concert.

Hazel White, soprano, will sing on the program of the Hollywood Community Chorus in the Hollywood High School Auditorium Tuesday evening. Hugo Kirchhofer will direct the chorus.

Will Play New Quartet.

The fourth chamber music concert by the Zoellner Quartet will take place at the Ebell Club house the 24th inst. One number by Frank Bridhe of London will be introduced. This is a quartet which has already been well received in Europe.

A Haydn and a Brahms quartet will also be included.

De Chauvenet in East.

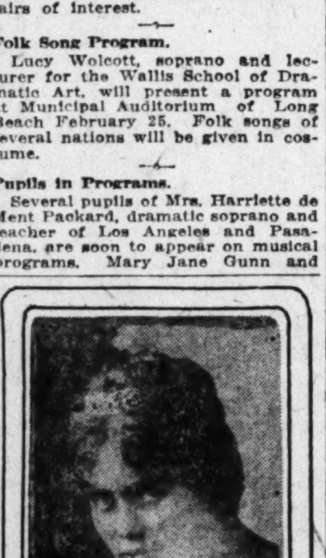
Jean de Chauvenet is at present in New York attending musical affairs of interest.

Folk Song Program.

Lucy Wolcott, soprano and lecturer for the Wallis School of Dramatic Art, will present a program at Municipal Auditorium of Long Beach February 25. Folk songs of several nations will be given in costume.

Pupils in Programs.

Several pupils of Mrs. Harriette de Ment Packard, dramatic soprano and teacher of Los Angeles and Pasadena, are soon to appear on musical programs. Mary Jane Gunn and Janette Gilbert are engaged to sing a new song, "California is Calling Me," at Grauman's Theater for the California week.



Lucy E. Wolcott,
Lyric soprano, who is to give folk-song program at Long Beach.

Olga Steeb,
Who will play piano concerto with Philharmonic Orchestra this week.

Miss Hazel Wright, Miss Dorothy Driscoll, Miss Gilbert and Miss Gunn have been engaged for the new opera company W. G. Stuart is rehearsing. Mme. Ena, who was especially well received as soloist recently with Grauman's Orchestra, is to appear in recitals for the Pasadena hotels concert season.

New Song Heard.

"The Desert Love Song," a manuscript composition by Abbie Norton Jamison, president of the Music Teachers' Association of California, was sung at the second Sunday evening concert at the Ambassador Hotel, by Frank Greiger. Four other new compositions of Miss Jamison's are "The Song of the Violin," "Negro Death Song," "The Banjo Song" and "When the Sand Man Comes."

The poem of the latter was written by Virginia Burton Bradley and was recently given at the teachers institute at Trinity Auditorium by the Grammar School Glee Club.

Twenty of Miss Jamison's pupils appeared Tuesday evening at her residence studio.

Ellis Club Concert.

The Ellis Club will render the second concert of its twenty-fifth season, Wednesday evening, at Philharmonic Auditorium. A feature of this occasion is that the program will be made up entirely of compositions requested by associate members.

Miss Marian Woodley, contralto, is to be the soloist. Miss Woodley has appeared in concert in various parts of the United States and recently sang with the Philharmonic Orchestra here.

She will render two groups of songs.

Other artists assisting the club on this occasion will be Alfred Katner, harpist, and Ilya Bronson, 'cellist, both of whom will appear with Miss Woodley, and with the club in Frederick Stevenson's "An American Ace," a highly dramatic number for tenor solo and chorus. C. Clifford Beihl is to be tenor soloist.

Numbers by the club follow: "The Victory" (Protheroe;) "Brier Rose" (Dubois,) "In Vocal Combat" (Dudley Buck,) "The Earl-King" (Schubert,) "Private Dreams" (Huerter,) "All Praise to God in Light Arrayed" (from Wagner's opera "Lohengrin") with bass solo by E. S. Shank and organ accompaniment by Dr. Ray Hastings; "O, That We Two Were Maying" (Nevin,) "Mammy's Lullaby" (Spross,) arranged from Dvorak's "Humoresque;" "Give a Man a Horse He Can Ride" (O'Hare,) "By the Blue Danube" (Strauss,) and the closing number, "An American Ace."

J. B. Poulin will direct the club and Mrs. M. Hennion-Robinson will be the accompanist.

Carlson Pupil Soloist.

Hulda Dietz, mezzo-soprano, pupil of Anthony Carlson, will be soloist at the Ambassador Hotel this evening.

Julia Claussen Soon.

The new Ambassador Hotel auditorium will be opened to the general public for the first time at the recital of Julia Claussen the 27th inst.

This is the second concert on the Ambassador soloists series, which was opened by Serge Prokofieff last week at Trinity. From now on recitals on this course will be given at the Ambassador.

Julia Claussen, the mezzo-soprano, is not a stranger to this city, but it is about eight years since she appeared. Since then she has achieved fame in the musical world. She was a member of the Boston Opera Company and later of the Metropolitan Opera Company, and already she is engaged as a member for next season.

Not long ago the King of Sweden presented her with the "Jenny Lind medal," a rare honor, bestowed on account of her Swedish descent and her artistry.

Davis College Recital.

The Davis Musical College gave a recital on Tuesday evening at the St. Athanasius Episcopal Church on Echo Park avenue. Mrs. J. G. Stanaway, organist, and Miss Ada Clarice Atkins, soprano, were heard. Mrs. Stanaway, a pupil of Dr. Ray Hastings, rendered her numbers effectively. Miss Atkins, who is a pupil of Mrs. Eugene E. Davis, displayed an attractive personality and voice.

Opera Soon to Tour.

With only two weeks more of its home season remaining the Chicago Opera Company has sent its first shipment of paraphernalia to New York, to begin its transcontinental tour. Eight productions to come to Los Angeles on this tour, the week of April 4. Mary Garden, Rosa Raisa, Lucien Muratore and Rosina Storchio are to be among the principals.

The latter singer will be remembered as having created "Madame Butterfly" at its premiere at La Scala in Milan. Joseph Hislop, Scotch tenor; Ricardo Martin, tenor of wide popularity are also among the singers; Olga Carrere and Dorothy Francis are included in the sopranos; Gabriella Bezanzoni, Philene Falco and Carmen Pascova are among the mezzo-sopranos.

Henry Morin has proven an outstanding conductor, especially in the French operas. Pietro Gimini is the new Italian conductor.

Salzedo and Povla Frijsh.

The first event on the midwinter Philharmonic course will be the concert by the Salzedo Harp Ensemble and Povla Frijsh, Tuesday evening, at Philharmonic Auditorium.

Founded by Carlos Salzedo, one of the most famous living harpists this organization has achieved a distinct success during the last two seasons. Not only is the picture made by the seven harpists attractive, but the programs as arranged by Salzedo are particularly grateful.

He has worked indefatigably, not only in writing original compositions for the ensemble, but in enlisting the interest of the leading composers in the possibilities of the harp. He has transcribed and arranged numerous classical compositions, which, owing to their having been written for the harpsichord and kindred instruments, lend themselves to the harp.

Salzedo appears as soloist on the programs.

Of Povla Frijsh, the Danish soprano, who is co-star with Salzedo, a noted French critic has said, "Some artists are peculiar, some are great, some are peculiarly great."

Her artistic ascendancy in Paris made her the idol of the salons of that city, where artists like Cortot, Pugno, Casals and Thibaud played her accompaniments.

She will sing the Ensemble Minuet Chante (Rameau;) "Springtide" (Grieg,) "Sylvelin" (Sinding) "Snow" (Lie,) and "The Maiden and I," a Scandinavian folk tune. With Mr. Salzedo at the piano she has programed "L'Invitation au Voyage" (Henri Duparc,) "Lullaby" (Scott,) "Homing" (Del Riego,) "La Pluie" (Pierre-Alin,) beside a group of French folk songs.

The ensemble will render Bach's Sixth French Suite and three preludes by Debussy will be heard. The Salzedo harp solos will be two preludes of his own composition.

Godowsky-Rosen Recital.

Arrangements have been completed for a joint recital by Leopold Godowsky, pianist, and May Rosen, the Russian violinist, according to announcement by L. E. Behymer. The former is a favorite of many seasons here, while Rosen's magnificent success last week as soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra makes his appearance on the concert platform, a welcome one.

The principal numbers programmed include the famous Cesar Franck Sonata, the Saint-Saens Concerto and six studies from the Thirty Moods, written by Godowsky.

Tetrazzini's Success.

W. H. Leahy, who years ago rescued Luisa Tetrazzini from bankruptcy and made her the popular singer she is today, is once more managing the diva on her present transcontinental tour.

Traveling in a private car, with her associates on the program and intimate friends, La Luisa is once more the sunshiny, Italian personality of her first appearances on this side.

Everywhere she is singing to sold-out houses, in the largest auditoriums.

Pupil is Soloist.

Miss Naomi Hall, pupil of Mrs. Clara Bradley Dawson, was soloist at the Highland Park Ebell Club Tuesday afternoon. The "Ava Maria," with the violin obbligato played by Lawrence Herbert, was one of the interesting numbers.

Mrs. Dawson is planning to give free scholarships to two of the best voices.

Clark-Cain Program.

A joint recital will be given by Edith Lillian Clark, pianist, and Amon Dorsey Cain, baritone, at the Matinee Musical Club, the morning of the 29th, at the Alexandria Hotel.

In Light Opera Company.

Hiram Tuttle has been engaged to sing the leading baritone role with the Stewart Opera Company, now being formed.

Sunday Morning Concerts.

Miss Helen Yankwich, soprano, will be soloist at the First Methodist Church Sunday morning. The choir, also under the direction of Patrick O'Neil, will give a series of Sunday morning concerts.

Trio's Second Concert.

The Los Angeles Trio, May MacDonald Hope, pianist; Leon Goldwasser, violinist, and Ilya Bronson, violoncellist, will be heard in their second concert tomorrow evening at Ebell clubhouse. They will present a program rich in musical as well as emotional content.

The trio will open with the seldom-heard Beethoven No. 3 in C Minor.

Ilya Bronson will be heard in the famous Grieg Sonata for violoncello with Mrs. Hope at the piano.

The program will close with the Brahms Trio in B Major, Op. 8. The trio will be heard in three other concerts later in the season.

Liszt Compositions.

Featuring a Liszt program, Brahm Van der Berg will give a piano recital in Los Angeles next Thursday morning at the Alexandria Hotel. He has selected many interesting compositions.

Van den Berg will also appear at the Maryland Hotel Friday evening in an entirely different program, at the Shakespeare Club in Pasadena the 25th inst., and at the Twentieth Century Woman's clubhouse in Eagle Rock the 29th inst.

His Liszt program will include. "Don Juan Fantaisie (Mozart-Liszt;) Rhapsodie, No. 12, "On Wings of Song" (Mendelssohn-Liszt;) "La Campanella," "Dream of Love," Polonaise, E Major, "St. Francis Walking on the Waves," "A Midsummer Night's Dream" (Mendelssohn-Liszt;) Rhapsodie, No. 6.

Plays Before Club.

Agnes Osborne Carter was heard in a piano program by the Santa Monica Bay Woman's Club last Monday. She played numbers by Liszt, Saint-Saens, Godard and Dennee.

Concert Ticket Bureau.

J. V. Petrie and N. Schnitt have recently opened a ticket bureau in the George J. Birkel Music Company's offices and are handling tickets for various musical events and theaters. A unique feature of the bureau, it is stated, is that no extra charge is made for the tickets sold, the percentage being paid by the management of the attraction.

Joseph Rosenfeld,
Violinist, with the Mischa Guterson String Quartet at Grauman's.

Povla Frisch,
Danish soprano, soloist with Salzedo Harp Ensemble.

Soprano to Give Recital.

Mme. Jorgina, soprano, is to give a program of operatic and recital numbers soon at Trinity Auditorium. She will be assisted by Will Garroway, pianist, and Jay Plowe, flutist.

CHESS EXPERT AND COMPOSER.

Sergei Prokofieff Shows His High Tactical Proficiency.

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT.

He wrote his first opera at the age of 7 years, and performed it. And now he is the champion chess player among the musicians. Or at least he is making a bid for the championship, because he beat Mischa Elman, who in turn had won from Josef Hofmann. So there you have a triumph that is not simply musical, but also tactical, for Sergei Prokofieff, pianist and composer of Russia, with whom I talked for the first time last week on the mezzanine of the Clark Hotel.

I noted en passant, as it were, that he also smokes a brand of cigarettes which is generally associated with the doughboys and the A.E.F.

I suppose he uses the long Russian ones on Sunday, but I forgot to ask. I always did have a suspicion that those Russian cigarettes were something of a frame-up, anyway.

Sergei Prokofieff—no doubt you have heard of him at some time or other. Perhaps not, though, because his career since he came to this country has been mainly in the East, although he entered America through the Golden Gate. (And incidentally had to spend three days on Angel Island—"Devil Island" he calls it—until they found out whether he was a Bolsheviki or not. If they'd known more about music and less about politics they probably wouldn't have let him stay in America.)

Prokofieff gave the first concert of the Ambassador Hotel series at Trinity last Thursday, the 13th (which shows that Mr. Prokofieff is not superstitious.)

Some time ago followers of musical magazines may remember there was a hullabaloo over Prokofieff's opera, "The Love of the Three Oranges" (which sounds like a second cousin to "The Love of the Three Kings," but isn't.) The work was to have been produced by the Chicago Opera Association, and I have Mr. Prokofieff's word for it that they spent nearly $80,000 on preliminaries after having commissioned him to write the opera.

I recall, as a matter of fact, that pictures of the settings—futuristic, you might term them—for the opera were published in the musical magazines. They are still in storage in the East, with little chance of their being used, owing to entanglements that arose over the presentation.

Meanwhile, however, Mr. Prokofieff has had the opportunity of introducing several of his other important works in this country—one the "Scythian Suite," produced by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, with himself conducting, and, beside, his piano concerto.

This season he has been touring, playing a classical and modern programs, containing some striking examples of the new Russian school, among these, compositions by two men whom he favors particularly, but who are practically unknown in this country, namely Medtner and Miaskowsky.

"In Russia I presented only modern composers," said Mr. Prokofieff, in speaking of the difficulties he encountered at first in America. "I found it was out of the question to do the same thing here.

"So I had to start in and learn a classical program. I tried to select works that were not hackneyed. Locally, I shall probably give the Sonata, Op. 101, of Beethoven, one of his last compositions in the form, and a group of Schubert waltzes. I suppose hardly anybody knows that there is such a thing as a series of Schubert waltzes. There are about 200 of them, as a matter of fact, and it has been aptly said that one is worse than the other. Still I have managed to select some very interesting ones here and there, and played together they really make a pretty group."

Mr. Prokofieff has written one other opera beside "The Love of the Three Oranges," which he is desirous of having produced. This is based on Dostoievsky's book, "The Gambler." The score is in Russia. Further than this he is completing a ballet for the Diaghileff dancers, who were seen here some seasons ago, and who are now in the French capital. This ballet he himself will probably conduct.

GAMUT MAKES OPERA STARS MEMBERS.

Los Angeles "adopted" two distinguished artists through the Gamut Club, Wednesday night. Anna Fitziu and Giuseppe Agostini, both of the San Carlo Opera Company, were made honorary members of the organization. It was "opera night" at the club's monthly dinner, and a group of distinguished persons were present.

Max Rosen, the young violin virtuoso who recently came to Los Angeles, received a tremendous ovation when he rendered two numbers by Sarasate, and by Godowsky, respectively. President L. E. Behymer of the club announced Mr. Rosen will be heard in concert February 3.

Among others of the San Carlo troupe attending were Mr. and Mrs. Fortune Gallo, Miss Sophie Carlebois, Mario Valle and Miss May Barron, who delighted the club with a vocal selection.

Hans Linne was in charge of the entertainment program, and presented the Metropolitan Quartet, composed of the Misses Mabelle Burch, Gladys Blackwell, Kathryn Giddings and Mildred Clare Wolfers; the Gamut Club Quartet, with Messrs. High, McGillivray, Goldwater and Tibetts; Miss Eleanore Magnussen, dramatic reader, and Miss Marion Wilson, contralto.

READER SETTLES HERE.

LA HABRA.

A farewell party was given for Miss Lorene Dabbs at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hersey Friday evening by eighteen of her young friends. There were popular games and refreshments, and a feature of the affair was a taffy pull. The guests were Misses Gertrude Marsden, Fern Canfield, Edith Kenney, Mary McElphatrick, Pearl Phillips, Margaret Jones, Alta Canfield, Reta and May Hersey, Donald Redfern, James Balcom, Oral Herman, Merritt and Edmond Canfield, Wilbur Proud and Carol McAlister.

Mrs. Dan Lucid of Ceres is here for an indefinite stay at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Launer on Whittier Boulevard. She arrived with her nephew, Charles Stephens, who has been away on a two weeks' visit with friends in Sacramento.

The marriage of Miss Grace Tully and Bruce Homan was solemnized on Thursday afternoon at the Methodist parsonage on Central avenue in the presence of a number of friends of the bride. The pastor, Rev. W. Grant Smith, performed the ceremony, and the couple left, after receiving congratulations, for a short honeymoon. They will make their home in Whittier.

The Whittier Avenue Whist Club was pleasantly entertained on Saturday evening by Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Crumrine at their home on Hiatt street. After the games the hostess served delicious refreshments. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Proud were winners of the high scores, and others at the tables were Messrs. and Mesdames Charles Milliken of Whittier James H. Walker, Walter N. Hole, Frank Mitchell, Ray Frants and Clark Hinshaw.

Visitors at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank McFadden on First street the last week were Mr. and Mrs. T. E. McFadden and son Raymond of Perris, former residents of La Habra, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bruce.

LEAD OPPOSITE MEIGHAN.

Jacqueline Logan, former Follies beauty, will play the leading feminine role opposite Thomas Meighan in "White and Unmarried," the star's latest Paramount production, which is scheduled to start at the Lasky studio within a few days. A little less than a year ago Miss Logan stormed the theatrical offices of New York and won for herself a role in the revival of "Floradora." Then followed an engagement with the Ziegfeld Follies. It was during this engagement that she first attracted the attention of the motion-picture producers. A flattering offer brought her to California and awarded her the leading role in a recently completed production.

MAX LINDER ENTERTAINS.

Max Linder, French comedian, who is making five-reel comedies for Robertson-Cole, gave a dinner on Christmas night for a large number of film friends—among them Charles Chaplin and Maurice Tourneur. At a loss for proper wines he seized upon a quantity of two-year-old red and white wine, labelled the bottles Chateau Yquem, 1870, and various other famous vintages and had his butler serve a different vintage with each course. And it took three courses, it is said, for the connoisseurs to wake up!

GLAUM PICTURE SOON.

"Love," soon to be shown locally, is the first Louise Glaum picture made under the new contract between Producer J. Parker Read, Jr., and the star, it was announced last night. Miss Glaum, it is reported, now is bound to Mr. Read's productional management for a term of years. A brilliant program of productions has been planned for the emotional star, beginning with "Love," an Associated Producers attraction.

PRODUCTION HELD UP.

Work on the production of "Blood Brothers of the Pines," the latest starring vehicle for Frank Mayo, has been held up for four days to allow for a complete revision of the story.

WAR ROMANCE IS CULMINATED.

American Aviator Weds Beautiful French Girl.

San Antonio Flyer After Separation Gets Bride.

Met Wife at Tours During the Recent Hostilities.

BY ANNA LANE MORTON.
[SPECIAL FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The recent marriage here of George Fletcher Howard of San Antonio, Tex., to Mlle. Simone Marie France, of Tours, France, was, I learn, the culmination of a very delightful romance of love and war.

Mr. Howard served in the American Flying Corps during the war with great distinction and while stationed in Tours met the exceedingly pretty girl who is now his wife. It was a case of love at first sight on both sides, and when the American was ordered away with his squadron to another part of the theater of war, the lovers agreed to wait for each other until peace returned and as much longer after that as circumstances made necessary.

More than two years went by, and although Mr. Howard and Mlle. France corresponded regularly they could not contrive to meet.

JOINS RED CROSS.

She had joined the French Red Cross and he was sent to Russia, where, after hostilities against Germany had ceased, Mr. Howard became an official of the American relief administration. A few months ago that faithful swain wrote to Mlle. France telling her that he had been ordered back to London in order to report upon his work in connection with the European children's relief fund and that he wished her to join him there in order that they might be married as soon as possible.

So the pretty French girl without any hesitation made her preparations to leave her native land, and on Saturday, December 4, became Mrs. George Fletcher Howard at the Roman Catholic Church of St. Augustine's, Queen's Gate, London. The church, which is in one of London's fashionable residential districts, was crowded with friends of the bride and groom, the American officials from the Relief Administration at 12 Grosvenor Gardens being specially conspicuous while the United States Embassy was also represented.

DRESSED IN SATIN.

The bride wore a lovely gown of soft white satin with a short skirt that was completely covered by a wonderful veil of point d'Alencon, which formed a long train at the back.

There was a reception after the wedding at the Hotel Rubens (which is directly opposite Buckingham Palace) and then the "newlyweds" left town for a fortnight in Paris, at the conclusion of which they set off for Poland. They will make their home in Warsaw, their address being Kred y towa 8. Log 8—which looks like a special telegraph code, but which actually is an eminently desirable dwelling in one of Warsaw's fashionable boulevards. Mr. Howard continues to represent the American Relief Administration while in Poland.

WOMEN.

There have been women Free Masons in France since 1785, while in Spain women are admitted to many of the ordinary lodges on equal terms with men.

The first woman inspector of schools in Brazil has recently been appointed in Rio de Janeiro.

The number of women employed in shops and factories in the Argentine Republic has doubled within the last five years.

The mother of Herbert Hoover was a preacher, after the casual Quaker fashion.

Mrs. Bertha F. Drabelle has been appointed a building inspector in St. Louis, with special supervision over department stores and other establishments where many women are employed.

Women in China are liberal patrons of the motion-picture shows.

Two thousand women are attending the University of Warsaw, the most of them studying law or medicine.

England's champion typewriter is Miss Millicent Woodward, who has a record of writing 169 words a minute—a speed which is faster than that of the average shorthand writer. Furthermore, she accomplished the feat blindfolded.

"The Opportunity to Better Your Home":

Barker Bros'. Forty-first Great Annual Clearance!

THOSE WORDS—"The Opportunity to Better Your Home"—are rich in meaning for people who have planned and hoped and dreamed for many months of the time when circumstances would permit of their making a glorious reality of their home-ideal.

This wonderful Clearance, with its hundreds and thousands of articles of Furniture and other Furnishings for the home, offers a wealth of opportunity to you who love your homes, whereby you may acquire the home-needs, the home-comforts and the home-beauties that you so desire at prices which have been very substantially lowered.

The Opening Day —Thursday, January 20— is Barker Bros.' Day at the Adobe Electrical Home

Thursday, the first day that this new, up-to-the-minute model home will be open to the public, has been set aside as "Barker Bros.' Day"—the day when Barker Bros.' patrons are especially invited to inspect this home, which has been built as a model of Spanish architecture and electrical convenience, and which Barker Bros. have furnished and decorated in accordance with the highest ideals of artistic livableness.

The Adobe Electrical Home is located on Larchmont boulevard, at Second street. If you go by street car, board a West Sixth Street car marked "Melrose" and ride to Second and Larchmont.

Hours, 2 to 10 p. m.

Every part of your home—the living-room, library, drawing room, hall, bedroom, dining room, breakfast room, kitchen, nursery, sun-room or veranda—may be improved very materially at a sum much smaller than would be possible at the regular prices.

For every department at Barker Bros.' has contributed to the strength of this event to such a degree that, as forecasted, it has proved to be the greatest Clearance in all our forty-one years.

The varieties are practically boundless—the values are all that supreme quality and extreme reductions can make them!

The Entire $430,000 Stock of Living Room Furniture

Is included in a sweeping clearance, with nothing reserved. Hundreds of distinctively designed decorative articles; one of the most comprehensive assortments of overstuffed furniture in the West; an unusual showing of mahogany-and-cane combinations, in the various upholsterings; tables of all sorts; desks; secretaries; bookcases; in fact, every kind of furniture that makes living-rooms livable, in all designs and all finishes—are offered for your selection at discounts that speak for themselves.

Entire Stock of Bedroom and Boudoir Furniture

Too, is included—about $300,000 worth, in all. Surely, in those three large floors of beds, dressers, dressing tables, vanity dressers, chiffoniers, chifforobes, writing desks, chairs, bedside tables, etc.—some representing the various period styles, others having graceful lines all their own, and in all the desired finishes—there is enough furniture, either in single articles or en suite, to make every bedroom in Los Angeles from the simplest to the most pretentious, take on new glory—at a curtailed cost.

$200,000.00 Worth of Dining and Breakfast Room Furniture is one of the important features of the Clearance. Here, you may select any sort of furniture, from a small, refined dining-room set of oak at $67.50 to a large, sumptuous suite in any one of the period styles and finishes, with the assurance that you are getting the unusual in value.

Even the Famed "Quality Reed" Furniture in a pleasing variety and an extraordinary line of Grass furniture and Fiber furniture are offered in the Clearance at prices which we believe it would be impossible for us to offer at any other time.

The Entire Stock of Drapery and Upholstery Fabrics

—totalling in value $175,000—is repriced at Clearance discounts.

$250,000 worth of Linens and Bedding is embraced at important reductions.

The entire stock of Art and Gift Wares is repriced at reductions of at least 15%, and in many cases, even 50%.

In addition to these prominent features, there are quantities of:

—Rugs and Carpets
—Wall Paper
—Children's Furniture
—Dolls and Toys
—Baby Carriages
—Mattresses of Barker Bros.' Own Make —Simmons Metal Beds and Box Springs
—Vacuum Cleaners
—Housewares and Kitchenwares
—Stoves, Refrigerators and Kitchen Cabinets
—Electrical Equipment

—at the usual significant reductions.

No stone has been left unturned to make this the Greatest Clearance not only from the standpoint of the amount of merchandise involved, but the one with the farthest-reaching influence, by which the greatest possible number of homes may feel the invigorating effect of improvement and progress.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR
painlessly and permanently removed by best electrolysis treatment—the only method which entirely destroys hair roots, without injuring the most delicate surrounding tissues. Hair so removed will not come back. Other methods, such as depilatories, powders, etc., may give temporary, but never permanent relief.

WARTS, MOLES TAKEN OFF
by dermatologist expert; painless electric treatment which leaves no marks or scars of any kind.

I DO THE WORK PERSONALLY,
using single or multiple needles and guarantee the very best work and absolute satisfaction. The many Los Angeles clients treated in my office gladly testify as to my skill as an electrolysis and dermatologist, expert. Special low rates this week. Mrs. Barton, NEW YORK ELECTROLYSIS PARLOR, 522 Black Building. Telephone 13213.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR,
WARTS, MOLES AND BIRTHMARKS.
Removed by the Electric Needle.
The only safe and permanent way when done by an expert operator, which means years of practical experience. It makes no difference to me who or what you have tried. I guarantee any hair I treat will never return.
Money and time saved by my method, which is painless and will leave no scars.
ANNA M. BERGERON,
1219-20-21 Haas Bldg., cor. 7th & Bdwy.

KEY TO BEAUTY.
(Witchhazel.)
Toilet preparations.
Have been compounded to prevent the bad effect of California climate on the skin and positively will not grow hair. For sale at Robinson's, Ville de Paris, Bullock's, Young's Market or at the office of the manufacturer, ANNA M. BERGERON.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIRS—
WARTS AND MOLES.
Pulling a few stiff hairs from the face may start a serious growth. Let me demonstrate free of charge how pulling, cutting, using wax depilatories and the so-called hair removers promote growth of hair on the face. My electric machine is the only known method of killing superfluous hair, fuzz, warts and moles, without destroying the surrounding tissue. This machine destroys 300 hairs an hour. I have had 19 years' experience and devote all my time to the work. A binding guarantee that any hairs or moles I treat will never return. Many L. A. satisfied customers will testify to my skill as an expert.
MRS. F. A. SCOTT,
Suite 407 Bumiller Bldg.,
430 S. Broadway.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR—
HUMILIATING AND UNSIGHTLY.
There is only one method known today of permanently removing superfluous hair, and that is Electrolysis (electric needle.) This process in the hands of reliable and expert operator insures absolute satisfaction. I stand back of my work and guarantee any hair treated by me will be permanently destroyed, leaving no scars.
MABEL BRENTWOOD SMITH,
With Wetter-Jackson Co.,
450 South Broadway.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR
THE ONLY SURE AND SAFE METHOD of removing superfluous hair and moles PERMANENTLY is by means of the electric needle. THE SURE WAY is the CHEAPEST WAY. This is particularly true of unsightly, disfiguring hair on the face and neck and bushy, straggling eyebrows. We operate as high as SIX NEEDLES AT ONE TIME, thus saving YOU both time and money. REMEMBER—SIX TIMES THE AMOUNT IN PRACTICALLY ONE-HALF THE TIME AND AT ONE-HALF THE REGULAR CHARGES.

TO LET—NEW STORES READY
The ground floor store rooms in the new Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company buildings at South Park avenue and Fifty-ninth place are now ready for occupancy. They include a large market space for delicatessen, lunch counter, crockery and tinware, bakery, candy and soft drinks, grocery, meat market, and a variety of other mercantile purposes. On opposite corner is an arcade, something new for Los Angeles, but patterned after the arcades in the larger Eastern cities; shops for rent for every conceivable purpose; shoe store, millinery, jewelry, dry goods, gents' furnishing, dressmaking, offices for doctor and dentist, corner for drug store. There is nothing like this in L. A., and as there will be but one store or shop of a kind it will pay you to act promptly. There is a permanent community of 10,000 people immediately tributary to these locations, and when the factory is running full force upward of 15,000 persons will patronize this business section. The fronts are now in and you can take possession immediately. Come down and look them over; you will be sure to find a store here that suits your purposes. Do not wait until Monday or Tuesday, but come out TODAY, so you will get your proper location. Agent at the property every day, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Prohibition Commissioner Declares People Over Their Hang-Over.

Plenty Work Ahead; Whisky Rings to Break; Expect Busy Time.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—As the first year of national prohibition ended tonight, Prohibition Commissioner Kramer declared the American people were rapidly recovering from their "hang-over." He believes they have begun to taper off their liquor drinking.

Although liquor, some of it good, but much of it bad, still is obtainable in large quantities, the head of the prohibition enforcement corps believes the first year's work has brought a large measure of success. He had expected it to be hardest both for the law enforcing staff and those who were deprived of their beverages.

In the future, the commissioner said, enforcement of the law should become increasingly easier while those who used to put a foot on the brass rail should gradually become reconciled to the saloonless era.

"In our first year," said Mr. Kramer, "we have seen the private stocks absorbed like lakes in the desert. We have raided and prosecuted. We believe we have made life unpleasant for the bootlegger and other traffickers in whisky. It has been a difficult and sometimes dangerous job, yet those of us who have been on the job itself can see changes for the better."

PLENTY OF WORK YET.

But there remains much to do, the commissioner declared. He told of whisky "rings" and combinations and of how the bureau had gathered evidence indicating a rebirth of the business of bootlegging in some places. On the other hand, however, Mr. Kramer is convinced that there is an increasing sentiment favorable to prohibition which eventually will compel many bootleggers to "give up."

Records of the prohibition bureau show that fewer dealers are seeking permits to engage legitimately in the business of handling liquor next year. Many of them, Mr. Kramer said, knew in advance they would be refused because they had "taken a chance" with the law. There were more than 70,000 of the permits in existence in the past year, but there will be perhaps not more than half as many next year. The bureau has been busy culling out the "undesirables," for several months and the new list will be held to the strictest minimum, the commissioner declared.

During the first ten months of constitutional prohibition, 35,569,000 gallons of distilled spirits were withdrawn, tax paid, from bonded warehouses. On this basis, it was officially estimated that withdrawals for the year ending tonight would exceed 43,000,000 gallons.

Such withdrawals are permitted for nonbeverage purposes, and prohibition officials are unable to check directly on the amount which finally is diverted to beverage use. Mr. Kramer said, however, that large quantities are thus consumed and it is one of the problems of the bureau to restrain this transfer.

Internal revenue records show that for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1919, the last full year before prohibition, withdrawals for all purposes aggregated 81,600,000 gallons. The records also show that withdrawals for nonbeverage uses during the months of that year averaged only about one-fourth of the amount taken out of bonded storage for drinking purposes.

PRINCIPAL PROBLEM.

One of the principal problems encountered in the enforcement work, Mr. Kramer said, is the variation in the points of view of Federal attorneys and courts. It has been difficult to obtain interpretations of the law that are similar, he continued, while the infliction of penalties likewise has varied. United States attorneys have differed as to the powers and duties of agents and, where there has not been a majority of citizens favoring prohibition, Federal courts have dealt lightly with offenders.

Mr. Kramer believes, however, that the second year will show improvement in this connection also. He said uniform plans of court procedure were certain to come and that, as a result, prosecutions would be better handled.

Enforcement officials have struck a snag and continually are confronted with problems concerning the manufacture and sale of industrial alcohol. It has been a source of daily trouble for the agents, the commissioner declared. Rules and regulations governing its production and handling have been promulgated from time to time, but in every instance, according to the bureau head, there comes a new flood of complaints. These always require a new determination of what is or what is not, product that can be used as a beverage.

"The bureau fully comprehends the importance of industrial alcohol," Mr. Kramer asserted. "It does not desire to hamper or hinder its legitimate use, but there are so many persons who will drink any concoction that has a 'kick' that we just have to be strict."

Mr. Kramer said many manufacturers of patent medicines refuse to believe their product has become a popular prohibition beverage. They attribute the increase in sales to an awakening of the people to the formulae's medicinal value.

"But we know differently here," the commissioner declares. "The alcohol and not the medical potion contained in those bottles is the reason for their popularity. So the 'kick' must be taken out of such preparations or they must be medicated to a point where the taste will not be pleasant.

"Our men have compelled manufacturers of some such medicines to correct their products already and the others will be taken care of as fast as we can get them."

The consumption of patent medicines with a "kick" in them, however, has convinced enforcement officials, Mr. Kramer said, that the drinking done now is simply the satisfaction of the "hang-over" appetite. He believes it is proof that social drinkings, the have-another-one-on-me kind of consumption, has definitely passed forever into oblivion.

"Of course," the commissioner continued, "there is still the social drinking in the homes wherever there is a private supply. But the nightly party drinking is gone.

"I have heard men say they would take a drink now when they never thought of swallowing a drop while the saloons were all about them. The cause for that is found in the spirit of adventure, born in most Americans. It will continue to cause some trouble, rather indirectly, for a while, but it will gradually disappear."

Disappearance of the "appetite" of the steady drinker also is predicted by Mr. Kramer, who foresees in that connection practically the end of the bootlegger. He asserted that while there always would be some demand for "hard liquor," prohibition enforcement in a few years would have resolved itself into a simple problem of vigilance, a guarding against the prohibition of moonshine and the patrolling of the border and coasts against smuggling.

Liquor smuggling, like the production of moonshine whisky, has developed into a business of high profits since the advent of prohibition. In fact, revenue officers assert that the value of liquor thus brought in exceeded the estimated worth of all other smuggled commodities.

DIFFICULT TO CURB.

Mr. Kramer said the enforcement agents' worst problem with respect to liquor "running" was in the Great Lakes area and along the St. Lawrence River section of the Canadian border. It has been difficult to curb and the end is not yet. The profits are increasing as the local supplies decrease and this condition, the commissioner believes, means that greater effort at enforcement must be concentrated along borders of the country.

Port cities, especially along the Atlantic Coast, have given the bureau trouble, for foreign mariners are willing to help Americans obtain quantities of any kind of beverages no longer sold here. But a weeding out of the enforcement staff, the elimination of such men who have not resisted the smuggling of liquor from foreign ships, is expected by officials to correct that condition eventually.

As for the moonshiner, Mr. Kramer candidly stated that "we always will have some of him with us." Operating in the mountain fastness, his still will spring up again, and again, but the head of the dry forces is optimistic. He declared the sentence had been read for the moonshiner, too, and that the combined forces of prohibition and internal revenue could keep on his trail as long as Congress authorized employment of men for that purpose.

Smoot's Bill Prohibits Use of Weed in Government Buildings.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The President and even Senators and Representatives might have to take to the streets to enjoy cigar, cigarette or a pipe as an aid to statesman-like reflection, if a bill offered today by Senator Smoot becomes a law. It forbids smoking in government departments or "and independent establishments of the government" as a fire-protection measure and its language was held to include the White House and Capitol.

A recent fire which destroyed census bureau records, attributed to a cigarette, prompted the Utah Senator's proposal.

STATE AUTOMOBILE REGISTRATION IS ON.

GOVERNOR RECEIVES LICENSE PLATE NO. 1; $138,140.80 FIRST DAY'S TOTAL.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 15.—Automobile registration for 1921 began in California today at the three offices of the State Motor Vehicle Department. At headquarters here $138,140.80 had been received up to noon in fees for new license plates, according to an announcement made by Charles J. Chenu, superintendent of the department.

License No. 1 has been reserved by Chenu for Gov. Stephens, as is the custom. No. 13 was given to Cashier W. H. Marsh of the department, who demanded the number as a hoodoo to highwaymen and burglars.

No. 23 was issued to George R Babcock of Oakland, who, Chenu says, has repeatedly and persistently appealed for the number long before the registration was due to open.

The system this year inaugurated by Chenu is different than it was last year. Applicants are given plates and certificates of registration at the same time, and will not have to wait, as they have in past, for the certificates.

NEW KING FOOLS GREEKS.

Constantine Calmly Announces He Will Follow Venizelos's Policy.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

ROME, Jan. 15.—The Greek people are like the man suffering from the day after the night before. For days there have been wild demonstrations of joy over the royalists' return. Every day the people marched in procession, each profession, trade and class having its own little celebration, which always ended before the royal palace in Athens, from the balcony of which the King's brothers and their wives would greet the people.

Sailors, soldiers, priests and workmen spent their days marching, carrying images and pictures of King Constantine. This lasted until rain began and the population of Greece was compelled to remain indoors. Their enthusiasm languished as their fanatical joy cooled.

Today they are wondering how their King can calmly announce to the world that he will follow the policy of the former government of Venizelos, when he has promised to restore peace and abandon war. Of course, they little realized before the elections that the Royalists were willing to promise anything, provided they could obtain the vote of the people.

DOWNFALL EXPLAINED.

Although the downfall of Venizelos is now an old story, the true manner in which it was brought about has been explained by an American tourist, now in Rome, who was in Greece the month preceding the elections. Knowing both parties in Athens he was able to study the situation at first hand. To his mind it was the cleverest and the most successful piece of propaganda work he had ever seen. It was essentially clever, because it was so quietly done.

As everyone knows, Venizelos was absolutely convinced that the majority of the people were with him. He overestimated his power, while underestimating the cleverness of his opponents, especially their leader, Gunaris. Like a modern Alcibiades, to whom politically he has been compared, he felt that his magnetic personality would carry him through. As he, himself, could not be bribed, he never imagined that his followers were in any way different from him.

It seems that about a month before the elections his Minister of the Treasury announced that 15,000,000 drachmas were being sent into the country to a private account and asked the Prime Minister if he thought it wise to allow all this money to come into the country.

WHY NOT—?

"Why not?" asked the Premier. "It will benefit trade and conditions, as it will surely be spent in Greece, as no permission will be given for it to leave the country."

The Minister took no further interest in this money.

Fifteen days later Gunaris, agent of King Constantine, proceeded to enter Greece for the purpose of voting in his native land. As it had been announced previously that Italy had refused to allow Constantine to live in Italy, his partisans had announced to every one that they were greatly discouraged.

The Greek government was disarmed and allowed Gunaris a great deal of liberty. Not only did he visit his own town, but at night he visited Athens, Piraeus and Venizelist strongholds. In every town he conferred with royalists, who all insisted that the elections must be won at any cost. They decided that a propaganda from mouth to mouth was preferable to any printed matter, of which the police could obtain possession. This propaganda was based on one theme only, which was this:

PROMISE PEACE.

"Tell the people secretly, especially the women, that if their men vote for Venizelos and his party they will never be free from war and desolation. The royal party will give them back their sons and restore prewar conditions. Instead of suffering and starving they will be well fed and taken care of. Is not Greece large enough now? What will more territory do if by gaining it your sons will be killed on the battlefield? Who will benefit by their death? Venizelos and his party, who will continue to rule and remain in power. Constantine will save you, but you must cast your vote for him, or he will not return again and you will know no peace, only war, war, war."

When the women heard this message they decided that not a vote would be cast for Venizelos. This propaganda spread like smoldering fire. The authorities knew little about it and considered what they heard as old women's gossip. Besides, as election day was near, they could not use repressive measures, as this would have been used against them.

In the town where Venizelos considered the whole vote would be for his party huge sums were paid for each individual vote, 3000 drachmas being the highest price. Money was spent like water. These bribes were distributed by picked agents, friends of the royal family and of Gunaris and care was taken that the money was slipped carefully to the individuals.

OBVIATE RISKS.

Gunaris, by careful organization, had obviated every risk of the police discovering what he was doing. He was working not only for his master, but himself, as had he failed his job as royal agent would have been given to some one else.

But government officials were sure of themselves and never dreamed that the elections would go against them. They depended too much on the gratitude of the Greek people, who all knew that it was Venizelos' personal magnetism and political acumen that had made Greece great, but they were frankly sick of war and desired peace.

The Premier was severe against those who were working for the return of Constantine, and never hesitated to have them arrested and tried for treason against the state. To perfect his plan for greater Greece it was necessary that he should have a free hand, which, of course, the royalists absolutely opposed.

One of the chief reasons that the royalists succeeded is the absolute lack of education among the masses. In some of the out-of-the-way villages the entire population knows nothing of reading or writing, even being ignorant of what Greece is geographically. Consequently, when their sons are sent to Smyrna, they have no idea where it is, or why they are going there. All they know, even those in the town, is that they have lost their sons or fathers or brothers while others have made millions out of the war. Even the profiteers are not satisfied with Venizelos's policy because, from a business point of view if Smyrna and the islands are added to Greece they may increase in importance and leave the Greek towns only such commerce as they cannot handle.

This commercial jealousy is not a modern tendency, as from earliest times it has amounted almost to hostility. Even ten years ago, when Crete was added, the merchants of the Piraeus fought against its annexation.

Now that Smyrna is Greek, the old rivalry will be bitterer than ever. During the war Smyrna agents, who were banished from their own town, started business in the Greek seaport towns and introduced their more up to date system of commerce by importing foodstuffs from America, whereas Greek merchants had always purchased a limited number of products from Italian or Dalmatian markets. Needless to say the Smyrna business men made a great deal of money. This competition caused great jealousy between the different factions who naturally blamed the Prime Minister for his Pan-Hellenic policy.

CLERGY AGAINST HIM.

Besides the poor and the rich Venizelos had the orthodox clergy against him. The clergy did not hesitate to say that King Alexander met his sudden death because he had usurped his father's crown. The police could not interfere in any way against the clergy when they praise Constantine and Sophia. The government considered the clergy in an indifferent manner and the clergy on their part felt that the royalists who were religious represented a far more ideal government than one which was interested only in conquest and under the thumb of France and England.

After the attempt against Venizelos's life in Paris keen search was made for all the royalists who had plotted against him. It was for this reason, the prisons were full of political prisoners, who had all sworn to do away with the Prime Minister. The head of a government could not allow them to go scot free, though personally he was indifferent to the plot. To friends he has always insisted that his death would not take place until he had accomplished his mission.

Like the great politician Alcibiades Venizelos fled from Greece; but no doubt like his historical predecessor he will one day return to lead the Greek people and be acclaimed as their protector.

POLICE ASSERT BONDS AND CURRENCY IN DALLAS MAIL ROBBERY FOUND.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

DALLAS (Tex.) Jan. 15.—Police here this afternoon announced they had been advised that $200,000 in Liberty Bonds and $46,000 in currency taken by bandits in a post-office robbery here last night had been recovered near Lake Worth, at Fort Worth. They said two mail pouches had been found.

The police today accounted for two of the six bandits. One was dead and another had confessed, the police said.

Rufus Clemon of San Antonio was killed when an automobile, declared by the police to have been the bandits' machine, was wrecked near Fort Worth.

W. S. Scrivner was arrested and confessed, according to police, that he participated in the robbery, in which three postal employees were seriously wounded and two mail pouches containing $28,000 in mutilated paper currency were stolen. Because of its condition most of the money was barred from circulation, but it has not been recovered.

VERDICT REACHED BY LOT, SAYS LAWYER.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

FRESNO, Jan. 15.—Charging that the verdict of guilty by the trial jury was decided by lot or by some other means alleged to be unfair to the defendant, Attorney Henry Brickley, representing the defense, today obtained a delay in the sentence of Charles Mutchler, convicted here Thursday of a statutory offense against Bonnie Owens, 16-year-old Fresno sales girl.

Judge McCormick set next Friday afternoon for the hearing of arguments for setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial if the motion is granted.

CHANGE OF VENUE IS DENIED TO McDONALD.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 15.—Motion for a change of venue was denied today in the case of Allen McDonald, who will appear for retrial Monday on a charge of attacking Miss Jessie Montgomery. The jury disagreed in his first trial.

McDonald's attorney contended that the attitude of the public mind precluded a fair trial in San Francisco. Argument on a motion to set aside remaining indictments against Raymond (Spud) Murphy, sentenced to one to fifty years for the attack on Miss Montgomery, was put over until Monday.

JUSTICE TAKES RAP AT JUDGE.

Pasadena Official Issues Statement With a Sting.

Crown City Organization in Favor of Lobby.

Two Pioneers Answer Final Summons.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

PASADENA, Jan. 15.—Pasadena police and judicial authorities are much annoyed over the attitude of Judge Weyl of the Los Angeles Juvenile Court, who recently denounced Justice Raymond G. Thompson of Pasadena for having fixed bail in the sum of $500 in the cases of Sam Orenstein and Sam Harman, two young men arrested by U. S. Deputy Marshal Bassett while selling bogus tickets to the Berkeley-Bakersfield football game at Tournament Park late in December.

Declaring that the youths were not criminals, Judge Weyl sharply condemned the Pasadena police for having taken identification photographs of the pair, and for registering their finger prints. It is an old saying with the police department here that the first one to greet a police officer after he returns to the city from Los Angeles is the juvenile offender he has just taken to the Juvenile Court for trial. They feel that the probation habit is being overdone.

Judge Thompson today issued the following brief statement in regard to Judge Weyl's criticism:

"The fact that Judge Weyl has seen fit to be so unfair and so lacking in judicial temperament and judgment as to criticise and denounce my action publicly in a certain case in which he does not know all the facts, does not justify me in making any public criticism of him. I am not starting my campaign for election and I have been a justice of the peace two years, so the novelty of a judicial position has worn off."

The last sentence is thought to refer to the fact that Judge Weyl was only recently appointed to his position by Gov. Stephens.

SUGGESTS BIG LOBBY.

The Pasadena Chamber of Commerce is sending a letter to every similar organization in the State, suggesting that it lend its support to a movement, originating in Pasadena, to send three prominent men from every Assembly district in California to Sacramento to lobby for the curtailment of State expenditures. This would give a lobby of nearly 300 men.

PIONEERS DEAD.

Two pioneer residents of Pasadena, Thomas T. Hayward, 92 years old, and George McKinney, 84, have died within the past twenty-four hours. Both were deacons in the Pilgrim Congregational Church. Mr. McKinney died last night at his home, 1383 North Marengo avenue, and Mr. Hayward passed away at his home, 1595 Kirkwood avenue, this morning. For many years Mr. McKinney was prominent as a member of the Chicago Board of Trade. Mr. Hayward had lived in the city thirty-two years, and Mr. McKinney not quite so long. The McKinney funeral will be held at 2 o'clock Monday in the Ives and Warren Company chapel. Arrangements for the other funeral have not been completed.

I. P. Pardee of Hazelton, Pa., son of the late Ario Pardee, known as the father of the Pennsylvania coal industry, declared today that an abnormal and almost panicky demand, and not profiteering by the so-called coal barons, has been responsible for the high cost of coal this winter. Mr. and Mrs. Pardee and daughter are guests at Hotel Raymond.

POMONA HONORS HERO WHO MADE SACRIFICE; WINS FIGHT WITH WILDCAT.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

POMONA, Jan. 15.—Pomona will pay tribute on Monday to one of the soldiers who responded to the call of his country in war and who lost his life in France in 1918. The body of Homer Whipp, son of John F. Whipp of this city, arrived in Pomona today from New York and arrangements were at once made for the funeral services which will be held at 10 o'clock Monday morning at the First Christian Church.

The Charles P. Rowe Post of the American Legion will attend the services as a unit under the command of Dr. F. C. Swearingen, post commander. In respect to the memory of the deceased hero, business will be suspended during the funeral hours and Mayor Vandegrift has ordered the flag over the City Hall to be placed at half-mast. The services will be conducted by Rev. Samuel G. Buckner, interment to be in the Pomona cemetery.

Homer Whipp was a member of the Los Angeles hospital unit and died in France from sickness contracted while in the service of his country.

ARREST MEXICANS.

Three Mexicans, charged with having thrown a discarded bicycle against the side of a moving passenger train at La Verne, are being held in the Pomona jail following their arrest today. The wheel is said to have broken two windows in one of the cars, and went through one window, striking the conductor and injuring him seriously.

Not long ago a Santa Fe train was stoned and passengers were badly cut by flying glass.

FIGHTS WILDCAT.

While showing some ranch property to a prospective purchaser near Hemet yesterday, J. W. Boggess, local real estate dealer, encountered a wild bobcat, which was dashing directly toward him. Arming himself with a club, Mr. Boggess succeeded in killing the full-grown beast after a short battle and returned to this city today with the proof of his struggle. He will have the animal stuffed and mounted.

LONG BEACH MAN IN SERIOUS TROUBLE—LATHERS GET SMALLER WAGES.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONG BEACH, Jan. 15.—After having been held in jail all night, D. F. Wisdom, an automobile dealer here and agent for a well-known car, was arraigned before Justice of the Peace S. H. Underwood today and released on a $10,000 bond given by W. M. Wright and F. Wakeman of this city.

The National Bank of Long Beach accused Wisdom of obtaining $750 under false pretenses in the assignment of a contract on an automobile on which it is said the Marine Bank here already held a contract. The City National Bank of Long Beach is suing Wisdom to recover on a $1500 unsecured note and holds a larger unsecured note, which is not yet due.

Wisdom's transactions with a San Pedro bank and a Los Angeles company are being investigated, it was said. His father, Attorney Frank Wisdom, who arrived here yesterday from Bedford, Iowa, appeared at the arraignment as his attorney. His preliminary hearing is set for January 20.

REDUCE PAY SCALE.

The pay of union lathers here, whose wage per day has been $10, has been cut 20 per cent through action taken by the union itself at a meeting last night, "as patriotic Americans in line with the drop in lumber prices and a small decrease in living commodities," according to the announcement made public through a committee today.

DIME CAUSES INJURY.

A sparkling dime lay in the center of Wilmington boulevard today. P. Adargio, 1017 Grattan street, Los Angeles, espied it. When he was in the act of reaching for it, however, an automobile driven by Charles Carlton, 830 Ohio street, this city, knocked him down and broke his left leg. Adargio is in the Seaside Hospital. [LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

RIVERSIDE, Jan. 15.—A detail of the local post of the American Legion stood at attention at the Pacific Electric depot this morning as the body of Lieut. Carl Meairs, who paid the supreme sacrifice in France during the World War, was lowered from the train. The remains were taken to the parlors of Amstutz & Glenn, from which the funeral will be conducted at 2:30 o'clock Monday afternoon.

LEGION MAY TRY VOTE ON BONUS.

Decision Today on Question of State Referendum.

Heads Fear Cash Payment is Among Impossibilities.

Say Whole Legislative Plan is Menaced by Scheme.

The question as to whether the American Legion, department of California, will insist upon asking the State Legislature to pass a bill providing for a cash bonus in addition to three other means of aid from the State for veterans of the World War may be submitted by referendum vote to the 52,500 members of the organization, it was stated yesterday by Buron R. Fitts, department commander.

A meeting will be held today in Legion headquarters in the Flood Building, San Francisco, to determine if the question shall be placed before the Legionnaires of the State as to whether they will support the State executive committee and the legislative committee of the Legion in their stand before the State Legislature.

DEFICIT LARGE NOW.

The committees felt it inadvisable at this time to ask the State to provide for a cash bonus, which would cost the State $18,000,000 and add to the deficit, now existing in State finances. The committees were assured that should the cash be urged, together with the other features incorporated in the proposed bill, the whole proposition would undoubtedly be defeated.

The meeting today in San Francisco, was called by Commander Fitts and will be attended by all post commanders of the State, prominent Legionnaires and State executive committee members. The primary purpose of the meeting, said Commander Fitts, who left last night for San Francisco, is to discuss the situation confronting the department headquarters of the Legion regarding a cash bonus from the State.

It was pointed out in a meeting held on Monday in Sacramento that the State would not stand to lose anything by the other forms of relief for ex-service men, but would lose $18,000,000 by a cash bonus.

THREE OTHER BENEFITS.

The other features to be urged are home aid, which means a loan of up to $5000 on the purchase of a home, to be secured by a mortgage; vocational training, and land aid by means of a loan of up to $3000 per man. A beneficiary under these aids, it is planned, must choose one of the three plans. The cash bonus asked would be $10 a month per man for each month in service.

Should the matter be submitted by a referendum vote to the Legionnaires, it will be the first time such action will have been taken in this State and the second time in the United States. The Illinois department is now taking a similar vote on the same question.

The Fresno post of the Legion, in a communication received yesterday by members of the executive committee, supporting the action of the two committees in not asking for a cash bonus from the State. The resolution of indorsement of the action was passed by the post of 2000 members without a dissenting vote.

LEASE GRANTED TO BOAT CLUB.

Motor Craft Enthusiasts to Have Fine Anchorage at Harbor.

The Los Angeles Motor Boat Club, of which Dustin Farnum is commodore, is to have a new clubhouse and anchorage in the east basin at the harbor. The Board of Harbor Commissioners yesterday agreed to lease the necessary land to the organization. The site is about three and one-half acres in size. The lease is for ten years and the rental to be paid will be $50 a month.

PAGEANT TO AID STARVING.

Fiesta of Nations is to be Given Here in February for European Relief.

A great pageant which will be known as a "Fiesta of Nations" will be staged in this city about the middle of February, as the crowning entertainment of the series given in connection with the European Relief Council's drives for funds for the 3,500,000 children who are facing starvation in Central and Eastern Europe.

ALL CITIZENS CAN AID.

Mrs. Willoughby Rodman, chairman of the Community Service, and also a member of the executive committee of the European Relief Council, has suggested the fiesta as the type of celebration in which many members of the community can take part and in which all citizens of the city will take an interest in attending. All funds raised at the fiesta will be added to Southern California's quota now being raised for the destitute and helpless little ones of the war-ridden countries.

Another entertainment will be the musical to be given at the Ambassador, the morning of the 27th inst., when many of the best-known artists of the city will donate their services and prominent social leaders will act as hostesses.

The Friday Morning Club has just raised $865 for this same cause and other members of the club, not present at the last meeting, will be called upon to add to the fund. Mrs. Seeley Mudd of Los Angeles has given $500 and this check alone will save the lives of fifty children. It has been estimated that $10 will save the life of one child.

EBELL CLUB BUSY.

The Ebell Club is making plans for collection of funds among its members and the Ruskin Art Club members are also collecting. At the annual jinks of the Woman's University Club last evening, a special appeal was made for the European tots. A member of the Friday Morning Club will give an elaborate children's party in her own home in order to raise additional funds for the cause.

An illustrated lecture will be given by Dr. Lulu Hunt Peters at the Ebell Club on the 28th inst., at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. This affair has been planned by the Los Angeles Federation of Woman's clubs. Dr. Peters's lecture will be entitled, "Twenty Months in the Balkans with the Red Cross," and she will relate her personal experiences in Central and Eastern Europe.

Herbert Hoover, national head of the European Relief Council, has made it clear by means of carefully prepared data, that America must raise $33,000,000 in order to save the children of Europe this winter. Donations for this cause may be addressed to European Relief Council, room 219, Herman W. Hellman Building.

FOR AIR MAIL LINE HERE.

Experts Point to Proven and Needless Dangers of Northern Route.

As a result of the controversy started in regard to the conduct of the western department of the aerial mail service of the government by Col. J. A. Jordan and given special emphasis by the recent falling in the streets of San Francisco of a government plane driven by Stanley Boggs, the whole question of the western terminus and general routing of the aerial mail service may be reopened at Washington.

The complaints forwarded to Washington regarding the conduct of the service constitute, it is pointed out by experts on aerial problems, not so much a condemnation of the work of the commanding officer as of the equipment with which he has been provided and of the unfavorable terrain over which it must be utilized.

A complaint forwarded by San Francisco citizens set forth specifically that Col. Jordan compelled aviators to fly over a dangerous course at an unfavorable season of the year, and frequently through regions hidden in fogs.

These are precisely the objections raised in many quarters in regard to the present course and its present terminus. From the time the airmen leave Nebraska until they land at San Francisco they are forced to go over some of the most unfavorable country, from an aviation standpoint, on this continent. From Cheyenne, Wyo., on over the Sierras, the course is not only at an extreme elevation, but is over jagged terrain, which adds to the normal hazards. It is also over a region in which snow and fog are extremely common.

In the competitive flights twice across the continent, by which the government tested the ability of its airmen in 1919, twice as many accidents occurred on the route between the Nebraska line and San Francisco as over any other territory of the same extent along the course.

It was pointed out at the time that the course was not well chosen and it was a matter of common knowledge during the flights that the airmen dreaded the last third of the course more than all the rest.

WHERE BLAME LIES.

It has been stated by those who have gone into the question that the blame now being heaped upon Col. Jordan should really go to the men who insist that the present course be used in spite of its many disadvantages.

The logical thing, students of aviation say, is not to blame the commanding officer, but to give him adequate material and equipment and a course on which there are as few handicaps as possible. Such a course, it is declared, is easily available if the planes are routed several hundred miles to the south of their present line of flight, and if Los Angeles is made the terminus.

Such a change would make it possible to continue flight throughout the winter under favorable weather conditions and would eliminate the necessity for passing at extreme altitudes over difficult mountain regions.

STORY IS DENIED.

George B. Harrison, secretary-treasurer of the Aero Club of Southern California, yesterday denied the statement attributed to him by another morning newspaper to the effect that he had received information from Otto Praeger, Second Assistant Posmaster-General, that Los Angeles will within the next thirty days be substituted for San Francisco as the Western terminus for the United States transcontinental postal air service. None of the postal officials has been notified of such a move and nothing is forthcoming from official sources in Washington.

Mr. Harrison added that he had not heard from Mr. Praeger since last June and that any information on the subject of a change of routing would not come to him from Washington, but would first pass through the hands of Col. J. A. Jordan, commanding the Western Division of the aerial service with headquarters in San Francisco. Col. Jordan is now in Washington in connection with the investigation being conducted by the Post Office Department into the whole question of an aerial mail service.

As a matter of fact, the only official action taken regarding this service recently has been in Congress, where the entire appropriation needed to even continue the service was stricken from the budget. The Aero Club is endeavoring to have the terminus brought here, believing the route better and safer for flyers but no action has been taken by the postoffice, so far as known here.

Worth Considering.

The question is not so much how you contract a cold, but how to get rid of it with the least loss of time and inconvenience. If you will consider the experience of others under similar circumstances, who have been most successful in checking their colds in their beginning, you will secure a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy without delay and use it faithfully. There are many families who have used this preparation successfully for years and hold it in high esteem. It is excellent.—[Advertisement.

CANNOT FORCE ILLEGAL LAWS.

Appeal Court Puts Limits to Power of Referendum.

City Heads Need Not Submit Unconstitutional Bills.

San Diego Wins Suit Brought by Registered Voters.

City officials in California cannot be forced, under the referendum system, to submit to their electors provisions of any proposed ordinance which would be unconstitutional and void even if it were approved by a majority of the voters, according to a decision handed down yesterday by Department One of the District Court of Appeal.

The court also lays down the proposition in the case, which is based upon a suit brought against the Mayor and Common Council of San Diego in an effort to force the use of certain street construction and surfacing material, that even a writ of mandate cannot, in a case of this kind, force the city officials to call a referendum election if it is clear that the proposed ordinance would be unconstitutional and void if passed.

The case at issue was on appeal from the Superior Court of San Diego county and Judge C. N. Andrews, the style of the action being C. L. Hyde, Thomas C. Breitenstein, David H. Ryan, John Engerbretsen and M. D. Goodbody against Louis J. Wilde, Allen H. Wright, Fred A. Heilbron, John A. Held, Harry K. Whitzel, Virgilio Bruschi and Don H. Stewart.

TRIED TO FORCE VOTE.

The plaintiffs, declaring themselves to be duly qualified and registered voters within the municipal limits of the city of San Diego, brought the proceeding against the Mayor and Common Council of the city, to compel the Council to either pass or submit at a special election a certain ordinance desired to be put into effect by the petitioners.

A judgment for the issuance of a peremptory writ was made after hearing, and the defendants appealed. By the judgment of the Appeal Court, in an opinion written by Justice James, in which he is joined by Justices Conrey and Shaw, the judgment is reversed, and it is further ordered that the Superior Court enter its order dismissing the proceedings.

The proposed ordinance had to do with the matter of material to be used in street construction and surface work. The court holds that the city of San Diego is governed by the general law of the State in the matter of the improvement of streets, and that under the law the city has the right to determine the kind of material to be used in street improvement work. It is further held that the provisions of the proposed ordinance, if valid, would effect a modification and repeal of the State law, that only the State Legislature or the electors of the Sate as a body, acting under the initiative, may change the State law. The ordinance would likewise operate to amend the freeholders' charter, authority for which, in the manner proposed, does not exist.

Electors by the mere filing of a petition otherwise sufficient, proposing an ordinance for adoption, have not the right to compel either the adoption of the ordinance or the submission of the same to a vote of the electors regardless of the subject matter contained therein.

STATE LAW CONTROLS.

Where no particular provisions are made covering a matter falling within the classification of a "municipal affair," the State law controls. The State law defines the powers of city councils in the matters concerned in the proposed ordinance, and neither the City Council nor the electors, in the manner here attempted, have the right to change, modify or restrict the power given under the statute. Where no special procedure is outlined touching a municipal subject, the State law always controls by force of the constitution.

The court further declares that the fact that executive action is taken by ordinance or resoluion would not make it subject to the power of the referendum. With respect to such action no matter how effected, the people, under the constitutional reservation, would not have the power of invoking the referendum to reject or approve by popular vote. The provisions of the referendum should be held applicable to all ordinances and resolutions which constitute an exercise of legislative power. To allow it to be invoked to annul or delay executive conduct would destroy the efficiency necessary to the successful administration of the business affairs of the city. In many cases it would entirely prevent the exercise of the executive power to carry out the acts determined by the legislative department, says the decision.

DISMISSES FEDERAL FRUIT FRAUD CHARGE.

COMMISSIONER ACTS IN CASE OF BANKRUPT FIRM AND BILLS OF LADING.

U. S. Commissioner Long yesterday dismissed the charge against T. J. Kennedy, charged with fraud in connection with the operations of the Sutherland Fruit Company, which was formerly in business in the Hollingsworth Building, and some time ago went into bankruptcy. Kennedy was an officer of the corporation. The asserted frauds were committed when the railroads were in the hands of the government.

The Federal grand jury some time ago indicted William F. McShane, president and treasurer of the company, for negotiating false bills of lading over the Southern Pacific, Santa Fe and Salt Lake lines, purporting to represent shipments of oranges over these lines that it is now declared existed only in the mind of the defendant. His case is set for hearing in February.

The arrest of Kennedy was made but recently, and he gave bond for his appearance for a preliminary examination before Commissioner Long. It is understood that the prosecution against him is not disposed of, as the matter is still pending before the Federal grand jury.

The arrested operations of the Sutherland Fruit Company and the negotiations of the corporation for funds resulted in a great loss to the Peoples' Trust and Savings Bank of Riverside, which has since passed into other hands.

PRAISE SAFETY COURSE.

Education Board Members Approve Work of Electric Railways.

Approval of the "safety first" educational work being conducted in the public schools by the Los Angeles Railway and Pacific Electric is contained in a letter received by the railways yesterday. The communication states that the Board of Education at its last meeting adopted the recommendaion made by Mrs. Susan M. Dorsey, superintendent of schools, and the teachers and schools committee for continuation of the safety work.

The accident prevention instruction is giving by a moving-picture film "Safety First" and a short talk by H. H. Matthieson, a member of the National Safety Council. Twenty thousand children have seen the safety film and heard the talks. Nearly 100,000 others are to be reached before the end of the school year.

WOMEN TO BUILD FINE CLUBHOUSE

Organization of Athletic Club Near Completion.

Downtown Site for Structure to be Purchased.

Cost of Building Will be Over $300,000.

Of civic as well as social and recreational importance is the plan for a Women's Athletic Club, launched a few months ago by the County Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, of which Miss Florence E. Schindler is president. The organization of the club is in the hands of a temporary committee headed by Miss Jane Humphreys, chairman; Miss Caroline Kellogg, vice-chairman, and Miss Clara Erickson, secretary, with headquarters at 1035 Van Nuys Building.

Approximately 900 charter members have already been enrolled and when the 1000 limit has been reached the plans of the organization and all details relative to the selection of a building site and structure will be turned over to the permanent organization to be carried forward with all the dispatch possible. With the closing of the charter membership. The membership fee will also be automatically raised.

Tentative plans for the proposed structure have been secured by the organization committee from Architect John C. Austin, and while these are but suggested features they will to a large extent be embodied in the accepted plans.

Architecturally, the building will be a credit to the city. As typical of California it is suggested that the structure follow the Spanish renaissance lines. A four or five-story building valued at between $300,000 and $500,000 is also contemplated.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Interiorly the structure will combine every possible comfort and luxury of club life. For social and entertainment purposes it will include parlors, lounge rooms, rest rooms, tea rooms, library and a large dining-room, which can be converted into an auditorium.

A billiard and poolroom is also incorporated in the suggested plans. Athletics will, of course, be a featured part of the club's activities and these will be expressed in a big gymnasium and exercise rooms thoroughly equipped with all modern appliances, including rope pulleys, horizontal bars, rings, etc.

Turkish baths, massage and shampoo parlors will be embodied in the proposed plan, as will also sleeping quarters, with and without bath, and probably sleeping porches. A novel feature which has attracted the favorable interest of the women active in the club's organization is the plan to build the swimming plunge on the roof of the structure, centering it in a garden of palms and other tropical foliage.

MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN.

It is expected that the organization committee will have closed the charter membership of 1000 women within a week or ten days, immediately after which definite steps toward the securing of a site and the erection of a handsome club building will be taken. The Los Angeles Trust and Savings Bank is serving as treasurer and financial adviser for the club and one of the remarkable features in the club's organization is that the temporary committee will turn over to the permanent organization a 100 per cent fund, having financed the launching of the project from personally contributed money.

OPEN NEW FOOTHILL SUBDIVISION.

Griffith Park Terrace, at Head of Western Avenue, is Placed on the Market.

Griffith Park Terrace tract, one of the few remaining close-in foothill subdivisions, will be thrown open for public inspection and for reservations this morning by the owner of the property, William Mead, who has established a tract office at Western avenue and Los Feliz Road. This subdivision, situated on the hills at the head of Western avenue, and extending north of Los Feliz Road to the boundary line of Griffith Park, contains thirty large lots, fronting on the parked entrance to Griffith Park. The situation of the property is unusual, the lots facing a running stream lined with sycamore trees, oaks, and bordering the fernery which has been constructed by the city along the park entrance road. With the development of this property one of the few remaining gaps in foothill tracts between Vermont avenue and the western city limits will be closed.

The tract has been surveyed, and the construction of roads and driveways will be started immediately.

INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION PLAN FOR LOS ANGELES.

Need of Exhibitions on a Larger Scale is Felt; Central Exposition Building Proposed.

The efficiency in production that is the distinguishing feature of manufacturing in the Los Angeles zone, an efficiency which is responsible for an increase of 500 per cent in five years in the manufactured products of this city, is to be the keynote in the Industrial Exposition being planned by the Chamber of Commerce, to be held during the late summer or early fall of this year, and in which all the organizations representing various groups of manufacturers and civic bodies are being enlisted.

The so-called "Industrial Week" of past years and the individual efforts of such industries as garment manufacture and furniture to direct attention to their facilities and products, are recognized as no longer adequate, in the light of the tremendous strides, industrially, made by Los Angeles in recent months; and which is even now gathering new speed for a record-breaking development during the present year. This was the consensus of conclusions voiced at the organization meeting of the new committee on manufactures of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday and resulted in steps being taken to immediately organize for an exposition this year that shall adequately express, comprehensively display and thoroughly advertise to the United States and the world, the industrial preeminence and the products of Los Angeles, together with the reason why this city is reaching for nothing less than the top in the world of production.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

A. F. Osterloh, as chairman of the committee on manufactures, will be in charge and that no time may be lost in securing efficient organization and prompt action, special surbcommittees have been appointed to cover various features of the proposition as follows:

Finance committee, Willard J. Doran, chairman; J. S. Torrance, F. S. Coates, Henry C. Lee, W. W. Woods, A. F. Osterloh, William H. Henry, E. B. Rivers, C. C. Hine, Ludwig Schiff and A. J. Kennedy.

Publicity committee, Henry W. Louis, chairman; Frank Houser, John W. Kemp, Dr. J. W. Koebig, Construction of Building to Start Immediately.

Will Have Capacity of Over a Million Feet Weekly.

Local and Salt Lake Men Are Backing the Project.

Thousands of dollars sent to Chicago and New York each week by Pacific Coast motion-picture producers will be kept in Los Angeles when the Standard Film Laboratories, one of the biggest recent industrial undertakings, is completed with a capacity for handling 1,200,000 feet of film a week.

Meyer & Holler (Milwaukee Building Company,) have designed the building and will immediately begin the construction work. The structure is to be of reinforced concrete construction and will cover a ground area of 120 by 75 feet, and is to be two stories and basement. It will be located on Seward street, near Santa Monica Boulevard in the heart of the film capital, supplanting the present offices of the corporation at 130 West Fifth street. The building will be set back from the street, permitting an attractive landscaping plan in keeping with the design of the building, which will be in Spanish archicture, the exterior of which is to be plastered, relived by iron balconies and with a clay tile roof.

The plant will be equipped with every modern facility to handle the enormous footage already contracted for, and will contain film vaults, film cutting rooms, projection rooms, a complete heating and air conditioning system, and much other scientific equipment.

OFFICERS OF COMPANY.

Financing of the big project has resulted in an interesting alliance between Southern California and Utah capitalists, and the personnel of the officers and the board of directors includes the names of men who are widely known both on the Coast and eastward to Salt Lake. The officers and directors for the ensuing year, who were unanimously elected at the recent stockholder's meeting, were as follows: C. E. Vermilyea, president, is a well-known West Coast capitalist and banker; John M. Nicholaus, vice-president, who will give to the new organization the benefit of his expericene as a laboratory expert, and who at the present time is the laboratory director of the Famous Players-Lasky studio and is widely known, for his successful work in connection with the film laboratory business. Adding to the technical strength of the company is S. M. Tompkins, the secretary and treasurer of the company. Mr. Tompkins, recognized as one of the foremost motion-picture laboratory executives in the profession, has just resigned as superintendent of the Universal City laboratory to devote his entire time to the Standard Film laboratories.

The Salt Lake City members of the board of directors include C. B. Stewart, now a resident of Los Angeles, O. H. Hewlett, Dr. G. F. Harding and L. A. Whitmore. Fred E. Mines of Los Angeles and William Nisle' of San Bernardino complete the membership of the board of directors.

Two hundred of the best laboratory experts on the West Coast will be employed when the plant is opened, which will probably be within ninety days. The workers have for the most part, served either under Mr. Nicholaus or Mr. Tompkins and are experts in the various branches of the work.

The acquisition of seven acres of land, ideally situated in Hollywood is considered to be particularly fortunate by film producers. This will put the new laboratory conveniently near to the biggest studios and will be a valuable addition to Hollywood. The building itself will be of sufficient architectural beauty to attract attention.

RENT LAW BAD, SAY REALTORS.

Building Will be Hampered, is General Belief.

Claim Profit Too Small for Adequate Return.

Ordinance Characterized as Freak Legislation.

Strong opposition to the rent law which was passed by the City Council on Wednesday exists among realtors of the city, who express the opinion that the percentage of gross profit allowed on buildings and furnishings is placed at too low a figure, and that this margin of profit is not compatible with good business practice. The opinion is freely expressed that if the law is allowed to stand unchallanged it will discourage building activities to such an extent that the rental situation will be made considerably worse owing to the lack of accommodations which will be brought about. Opinions on the new law were expressed by local realtors yesterday as follows:

Frank Ryan, president of the Los Angeles Realty Board: The City Council, having one of two alternatives to choose, chose, I believe, the wiser course in that the city is saved from an election that would cost nearly $50,000. The ordinance owes its existence, as have many class legislative passages, to a prejudice, never even stopping for a fair investigation. Sober judicial thought, I believe, determines speedily that the thing is ill-advised, not at all just, and constitutionally lacking the right of existence.

W. Ross Campbell: The law is going to make rents higher, because capital cannot be found for new construction work under such a law. Nobody will build for rental purposes while this law is in existence, and we will have exactly the same situation we now have in downtown loft and office buildings.

Elmer E. Cole: The housing situation is largely due to an economic condition, a condition which I think will adjust itself. Every individual should do all he can to remove all stigma of rent profiteering from the city. But I am not in favor of the rent law, and believe it should be declared unconstitutional by the courts.

PROFIT TOO LOW.

William H. Akin: I feel certain that if the thing were made to stick it would at least cut the value of rental property in half. The gross amount of profit necesary to obtain on rental property has been so thoroughly ascertained that it is no longer a matter of guesswork. The government and the National Association of Realty Boards have both made investigations. The Realty Board says that 16½ per cent gross is necessary to yield a return of 7 per cent, while the government reports place the figure at 17½ per cent. If the law stands, we will have difficulty in getting houses and apartments built. The way to stop profiteering is to make it easy and possible to build houses, and the law of supply and demand will then take care of the matter of rents.

W. W. Mines, of W. W. Mines & Co.: I think it is the worst thing of the kind ever put over. I am absolutely opposed to profiteering, but I don't see any need for this law. There is no trouble at the present time. As far as a gross profit of 11 per cent, it is a farce. A man is entitled to 7 per cent on his investment, and after taxes, depreciation and operating expenses, this will not leave anything like 7 per cent. I have looked into a great many cases of profiteering myself, and while, of course, there was some of it going on, I found that most of it was done by tenants, who had subleased the property, and the landlord was deriving no benefit from the high rents. There is no need for such a

TRADE METHODS TO BE TAUGHT.

Exchange of Students Between Nations Proposed.

Los Angeles Interests and Colleges to Assist.

Eighty Scholarships Placed by Commerce Body.

In an effort to improve and strengthen the relationship between the United States and Mexico, the American Chamber of Commerce is arranging for the interchange of students between the two countries.

"One object of this plan," says the National Foreign Trades Council, "is to place the Mexican students in American colleges and technical schools so as to fit them for useful careers. Another object is to place young Mexicans as apprentices in American mills and offices, where they will get industrial training.

"The American Chamber of Commerce of Mexico is also arranging to provide opportunities for young men from the United States to study in Mexican schools and industrial establishments. In this way, mutual understanding betwen the two countries will be greatly improved.

"Over eighty scholarships have already been offered by various colleges throughout the United States. It is expected that many more will be available for this purpose. The committee on Mexican-American scholarships of the American Chamber of Commerce, Mexico City, is now enrolling business men, chambers of commerce and public-spirited institutions throughout the United States in support of this project."

The trade extension bureau of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has this matter under consideration and as soon as it has been approved by the board of directors, steps will probably be taken to provide an ample number of reciprocal scholarships between the University of Southern California and accredited Mexican institutions of learning. Interest in Los Angeles is warming up on the trade possibilities with our southern neighbor, now that intercourse promises a long season or period of stable conditions, is the statement of the head of trade extension bureau, which is concentrating on Mexican data and information for the use of the members interested in foreign trade.

Olive Street Lease Brings Large Figure.

The Globe Dairy Lunch has taken a ten-year ground lease on the three-story and basement building, now occupied by the Hotel Pace, at 627-31 South Olive street, for a total consideration reported at $200,000. The property is owned by J. M. Cassidy of Des Moines, Iowa. The building contains three stores on the ground floor, but it is the intention of the Globe Dairy Lunch to remodel it and to occupy a portion of the first floor with a modern lunchroom. The remainder of the property will be sublet.

The sale of the lease was made through Metcalfe & Ryan, who also report the sale of the tract at Vermont avenue and Thirty-seventh Place to Guy Negus by the Mercantile Fireproof Building Company for $35,000. The property, consisting of nineteen lots, will be extensively improved by Mr. Negus with garages, stores and new residences.

RECORD PRICE PAID.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

TULARE, Jan. 15.—A thousand dollars an acre, said to be a record price for grape land in this vicinity, has just been paid for a forty-acre vineyard, the property being sold to A. Garbedian. The ranch located on the Oakland Colony Road, south of this city is well improved and set to full bearing vines.

NEW FOOTHILL SUBDIVISION.

The improvements will include all street work, sidewalks, curbs, water, gas, electricity, and all public utilities. These improvements, according to Mr. Mead, will be started within thirty days, and it is expected to have the tract fully developed within the next two months, since the installation of improvements and public utilities will be rushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

The property which is being subdivided by Mr. Mead was originally a part of the Griffith estate. The entire tract between Vermont avenue and Western avenue, beween Los Feliz Road and the Griffith Park boundary line was taken over by Mr. Mead about ten years ago, but the development of a large part of the property has been held up for a number of years by litigation. Legal obstacles have been cleared away, however, and the development of the entire tract will now be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

HOLLYWOOD HOME SOLD.

HOLLOW TILE SHIPPED TO HONOLULU.

Big Industrial Growth Anticipated This Year by Local Manufacturer.

That 1921 promises to be a banner year for manufacturers of Los Angeles is the opinion expressed by Howard Frost, president of the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company, which yesterday finished delivering to San Pedro its fourth shipment of hollow tile, consigned to Honolulu for the construction of government buildings. The territory served by local industrial concerns is rapidly expanding, states Mr. Frost, and local manufacturers are constantly creating a wider market for their products.

"We have other shipments to make before the order will be filled," said Mr. Frost, "and in addition to the Honolulu job are supplying the territory covered by twelve Western States. Other Los Angeles manufacturers are making their goods well known, and are serving similar territory. We are but in the infant stage of our industrial development and the future, I think is most promising.

"In my judgment, we are still about one year behind in our building program. There is still a great demand for new homes, and office and other public structures are going up at a rapid rate. The new Ambassador Hotel, just completed; the Pacific Finance Building, the administration building of the University of Southern California, for all of which we furnished the clay products materials, and the two big new theaters, Loew's and the Metropolitan, all indicate a prosperous and a busy building year for Los Angeles.

"Few persons realize the large number of workers employed in the industrial establishments of Los Angeles. On our pay roll alone there are half a thousand men and the annual pay roll aggregates about $500,000."

Consider These Tempting Bargains!

"Continued activity in building operations in the coming months is the logical expectation. Easier money should stimulate investments and constructive enterprises." This is the opinion of the Merchants' National Bank in its analysis recently issued. "Local business has progressed unabated," it states, "and serious unemployment is not imminent. Substantial gains are recorded in bank clearances, imports and exports, customs and postal receipts, and the business of the stock exchange. Merchants report business satisfactory, and the general opinion is optimistic as to the outlook."

WOOD AND FLOUR FIRMS EXPAND.

Sperry Flour Company Spends Million in Additions.

L. W. Blinn Lumber Company Adds Half Million.

Old Establishments Meeting Population Needs.

Two important deals in city lands and buildings consummated during the past week by the L. W. Blinn Lumber Company and the Sperry Flour Company have special interest in connection with the industrial growth of Los Angeles, and the optimism of the old-established concerns impelling them to largely increase their holdings and their plants.

The L. W. Blinn Lumber Company is one of the oldest lumber distributing establishments, having been for over a quarter of a century located at Sixteenth and Alameda, as well as at their present plant at Twenty-sixth and Alameda. To the latter plant adjacent lands to the value of approximately $250,000 have been added, and on this property is contemplated immediate improvements in buildings and sheds that will bring the investment in the extensions alone up to half a million dollars or more.

MILLION FOR FLOUR.

The Sperry Flour Company has acquired additional property adjacent to its present plant at Seventh and Alameda streets, and expansion plans on the part of the Sperry interests have been prepared that will involve the expenditure for lands and new buildings in Los Angeles and Southern California of over a million dollars during the present year, according to statements by Frank S. Coates, Los Angeles manager for the Sperry interests that cover the Pacific Coast, with administrative offices at San Francisco.

The purchases of additional property include two parcels at the northeast intersection of Alameda and Seventh streets, fronting 300 feet on the latter and 150 feet on Alameda, the other adjoining the present property on the east, with a Seventh-street frontage of 100 feet. Portions of these properties are at present improved with one, two and three-story buildings under various leases, which will require adjustment before they can be removed to make way for the proposed additions to the Sperry plant, in the way of grain elevators, additional mills and warehouses, made necessary by the heavy increase in business following the influx of population.

Increase in warehouse facilities for the Sperry Flour Company is going forward rapidly in many of the adjacent towns and suburbs. At Santa Barbara a mission-style warehouse with 15,000 feet of floor space will be completed within a month. At Riverside extensive additions and remodeling will also be effective within the same time, and at Anaheim a new warehouse 60x120 feet is already completed and in operation.

These property sales were all negotiated through W. H. Daum, specialist in industrial sites, in conjunction with the W. M. Garland Company, realtors.

Fact and Comment.

now ripe for such a report, for if its findings bring out the fact that profiteering in rents has been a general and widespread practice, then perhaps justification will be found for legislation of the type which has been enacted. But if the report establishes clearly and convincingly that profiteering has been the exception, rather than the rule, and that the advance in rents has been only commensurate with the increased taxes, operating expenses and replacement costs, then the error will be more clearly indicated.

Build the Tunnel.

A final effort to block the construction of the Second-street tunnel is now being made despite the fact that public opinion is overwhelmingly in favor of carrying the plan through to completion with all possible dispatch. It is regrettable that a few shortsighted people, more concerned about the immediate outlay involved than interested in future enhancement of values or in the good of the community, have it within their power to block such improvements. In the case at hand it is not probable that the project will be seriously hampered, for it has now proceeded too far to be held back for very long by such methods. It is to be hoped, however, that the case will be summarily and finally settled upon its appearance in court.

Those who are attempting to block the plan by this method are probably placing their hope not in definitely defeating the project, but rather again to block it for such a length of time that it will be postponed, laid aside and forgotten.

The Second-street tunnel plan will never be forgotten while the need for it exists, and the need, far from diminishing, is growing more and more pressing. It is an improvement as inevitable as the growth of the city itself, and attempts to block it will be as futile as an attempt to stop the advance of a rising tide. Why not face the fact that the city needs this improvement, needs it vitally as a link in its boulevard system, and put the thing through with all possible speed? No good purpose will be served by holding it up any longer.

Property at Figueroa and Ninth Sold.

David Barry & Co., report the sale by F. E. Keeler to David Evans of the property, 115 by 167 feet, at the southeast corner of Figueroa and Ninth streets. The present improvement consists of a two-story brick building on Figueroa street, and a one-story brick building on Ninth street. The ground floor contains eleven store rooms, and the Empire Hotel occupies the entire second floor. The purchaser bought for a permanent investment, with the view of later erecting a large building on this corner. David Barry & Co. represented both sides in the transaction.

OIL IMPORTS COMING HERE BY SEA ROUTE

Steamers Discharge Oil and Remain for Repairs at Harbor Dry Docks.

Crude oil is flowing into Los Angeles by sea as well as through our own pipe lines, and the harbor is reaping revenue from its excellent dry dock and shipbuilding facilities as well as from the fuel for factories and automobiles. Los Angeles is rapidly becoming an import port for crude oil, as well as an export port, as indicated by advices from the trade extension bureau of the Chamber of Commerce.

Approximately 200,000 barrels of oil, three large shiploads, are now en route here from Tampico, Mex. for refining in the Union Oil Company's new refinery on the West Basin, and this oil is all due here within the next two weeks.

The first of these cargoes left Tampico December 23, and is due here. January 14 in the British tanker Cordelia. It is bringing 60,000 barrels. The Cordelia will go on dry dock here after discharging, and then proceed to Port San Luis to load fuel oil for Taltal, Chile.

The second cargo, consisting of 70,000 barrels, left Tampico in the Union Oil tanker Coalinga on January 1, and is due at Los Angeles on January 22. The Coalinga also will be repaired here.

The Union Oil tanker La Brea left Tampico January 6, also loaded with 70,000 barrels of crude, and is due here on January 26. After undergoing repairs here, the La Brea will load fuel oil as part cargo for Antofagasta, Chile, and then proceed to Port San Luis to load the balance.

The Union Oil Company also had the tanker Oleum in port here for repairs. When the repairs were completed the Oleum loaded fuel oil and sailed on January 10 for Portland.

LOCAL FACTORY FIRST IN CHINA.

Hotel China and Porcelain Actually Produced.

Native Clays in Riverside County the Basis.

Also to Make Insulating Porcelain Devices.

The actual manufacture of hotel chinaware, or porcelain table, bath, lavatory and toilet wares, was commenced in Los Angeles during the past week, as a beginning in what its sponsors claim will be one of California's biggest industries within a very short time.

The Standard Pottery Company, with a half-acre plant on Griffin avenue, at the intersection of Mission Road and Alhambra avenue, where it has about 20,000 square feet of floor space under roof, is the latest addition to Los Angeles' industrial family, being officered by Walter Lysle as president and W. H. Brown as vice-president and general manager. Mr. Brown brings to this new California industry the expert knowledge gained in thirty years of continuous service in china and pottery production, and is enthusiastic about the prospects of an immediate and tremendous development in the manufacture here of china, porcelain and semiporcelain table wares.

The present plant of the Standard Pottery Company is the outgrowth of an experimental and research laboratory at the same location, which has demonstrated to the satisfaction of investing capitalists that every conceivable product of clay can be made in Los Angeles from the native clays in Riverside county and the Nevada china clays, and that these can all be made here more cheaply than they are now being produced east of the Mississippi. The Standard company is proceeding conservatively, beginning small, and expecting to expand through the profits on its own production.

NEW MACHINERY.

Newly invented machinery for refining clays is being installed at the present time and arrangements are already under way to add a series of high-grade porcelain and enamel insulating devices for electrical installations, for which there is a large western market, and which now must all be shipped in from eastern points.

As the first actual commercial production of table chinaware on the Pacific Coast, this is a noteworthy forward step in local industrial history, which, says Mr. Brown, may well be watched with deep interest because the present year is bound to see chinaware production grow faster than any of the other infant industries of Southern California.

REALTORS DINNER.

Ford & Becker celebrated the first anniversary of the occupation of their new building at 607 South Western avenue with a banquet yesterday evening at Ye Bull Pen Inn. Following the banquet the party, consisting of twenty-two members of the organization and guests, attended the Orpheum Theater.

RENT LAW BAD, SAY REALTORS.

law; we have plenty of accommodations, and there is plenty of room available in the hotels and apartments at a reasonable figure. It is like closing the door after the horse is stolen.

S. J. Chapman, Charles C. and S. J. Chapman Company: Until I thought it over a second time, I considered it a very unhappy thing for the City Council to do, but it now looks as if it were the only thing the Council could do under the circumstances. It will have a very detrimental effect on the city, as soon as the news is spread broadcast that we have pased another freak law. It is going to handicap investment in this class of property, and discourage enterprise.

P. D. Rowan, R. A. Rowan & Co.: There are two points to be carefully considered. First, the percentage of profit allowed to the landlord is not in accordance with the findings of the Real Estate Board, and with the figures of other investigators, and second, it will put a quietus on building activities. The result will be a deterrant factor in building activities, and the sequence of that will be a dearth of housing accommodations. Remove the incentive to build and we will get no new buildings.

O. A. Vickrey, O. A. Vickrey & Co.: I think it is a meddlesome law. It will accomplish nothing, and it has nothing to justify it. Conditions, if left alone, will adjust themselves. The movement to regulate rents is foolish, and there is no reason for it at all.

R. M. Gale, R. M. Gale Co.: The law is going to hurt the city more than anything we could do. People coming here from the East know conditions and know how to figure depreciation and expenses, and after they figure out the costs they will make no investment at all. People will not be tied up to any such rent ordinance as that. Moreover, I don't see how they are going to make the necessary appraisals on these properties unless special men are employed to go out and do it.

E. P. Bryan, Bryan & Bradford: I don't think there is any question but what there has been extortion in some isolated cases, but this is equally true of any crowded city. I think the law is bad, that it is illegal, and I don't believe that the city has a right to regulate rents, any more than it has a right to regulate any of our big business houses. I am disinterested because I have no flats or dwellings of any type to rent.

Gilbert S. Wright, president of Wright - Callender - Andrews Company: As a resident of Los Angeles for thirty-five years, with an intimate knowledge of rental and property values, I can only believe that the greatest injustice will be done and that the purpose sought to be accomplished will be defeated, and that should the ordinance be found constitutional, which I doubt, the renters themselves would be the most injured; and the great bulk of building would immediately cease and thousands employed as carpenters, bricklayers, plumbers and all artisans engaged in the building trade would be out of employment, and a period of stagnation would undoubtedly ensue.

What we do need is more millions to populate this great State, which at the present time has less than 4,000,000 souls, and millions of places of abode for them. But who can be asked to place his money in investments in rental properties, the majority of which have not returned their owners, over an average period of ten years, the rate obtainable from good bonds or mortgages?

"Statistics will prove that after deducting for depreciation, taxes, insurance, loss of rent, vacancies, rough usage and repairs, the property owners must secure a gross return of nearer 20 per cent than 11 per cent to give them a net return of even 6 per cent.

FOR INDUSTRIAL EXHIBIT HERE.

John C. Austin, H. H. Yermington, Harold Janss, C. E. Rosenberg, F. E. Golding, J. J. Keogh and Lem Goldwater.

Display committee, Frank S. Coates, chairman; Lawrence A. Lwein, Charles H. Link, B. Houssels, H. W. Kortlander, R. J. Busch, P. J. Swearingen, E. A. Holmes, J. L. Riordan and R. W. Pridham.

Entertainment committee, R. L. McCourt, chairman; J. A. Burton, Joseph Specht, B. H. Dyas, Raymond G. Osborne, H. M. Bigelow, Louis M. Cole, E. H. Bagby, H. Everett Charlton, W. E. Ross, Edgar Sanders, F. R. Feitshans, G. T. Nottage, Jr., Samuel Barendt and I. K. Loomis.

Transportation committee, James H. Hill, chairman, H. S. Hitchcock, Norman Masbeth and F. B. Gregson.

Lacking an adequate and permanent exposition building because all industrial growth has exceeded all expectations, these committees have called prominent realty interests of the city into consultation for early development of a site and erection, in a centrally accessible location, of a building capable of properly housing and displaying the exhibits, for which a sum not less than $100,000 will be necessary and in the financing of which no difficulty is apprehended.

The scope of this coming Industrial Exposition is ambitious, because it is proposed not only to show the world what Los Angeles is now making, but to drive home the reasons why Southern California is the logical seat of a great world commerce and industry. With visitors from all over the globe, it is determined that none shall leave without being thoroughly impressed with the all-year climate that permits maximum days of production; with the open shop and unterrified labor; with the abundance of workers of both sexes to meet all demands; with the raw materials, inexhaustible in quantity and indefinite in variety; with the abundance of water, fuel and power making for utmost economy in production costs; with transportation facilities by land and sea and a harbor equal to all demands that may be made upon it.

It is proposed to show that the commercial Pacific Coast is from Vancouver to the Panama Canal and that Los Angeles is its natural center of supply and distribution; is fully alive to its favorable location and its obligations to serve the east and west and the north and south with raw materials, foodstuffs and manufactured goods most economically, through the minimum costs made possible by its favored situation. These general features, the committees declare, shall be so emphasized that they will bring immediate results in the location of many additional industries looking for the conditions of efficiency they are to be shown as dominating factors in Southern California.

It is feared that housing accommodations adequate for proper display of the manufactured products may not be possible this year, because the exposition will be held in August or September and the time is short for such perfection of organization and building construction as will do justice to the facts. Some are inclined to favor a group of buildings, with a machinery hall for the iron and steel and machinery lines, a food building for the divers products in land and sea foods and a manufactures building for the other manufactured articles. Even if these should materialize the displays will not do justice to Los Angeles products, and it is proposed to take advantage of the great system of highways for organized visiting of the manufacturing plants, all of which are within a half hour's drive of the city proper, as a feature of education especially valuable for the foreign visitors.

The active co-operation of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, the World Traders and all the other trade and commercial bodies is to be invoked to the end that this first Los Angeles industrial exposition shall definitely establish this city as the American marketplace of the Pacific seaboard; as the source of supply and distribution for the entire region lying west of the Mississippi and for all the lands in and across the western ocean. As soon as the dates are fixed steps will be taken to interest foreign countries so they may plan to have their buyers and investigators present during the entire term of the display.

Another important movement begun by the Chamber of Commerce is systematic propaganda among the retailers of the West to demonstrate the wisdom of an entire change of front in the matter of buying. During this period of disorganization in eastern production and transcontinental traffic, western merchants are to be urged to keep their eyes on western manufactures, to buy at home in smaller lots, to buy often rather than for a season's supply, to look to the market where their frequent and repeat orders will obviate price uncertainties and shipping delays that will be more or less vexatious problems for a considerable period. That this is the time to break away from the eastern buying habits of past years and to learn the true value of the Coast market as typified in Southern California will be the lesson tradesmen will be urged to learn and apply.

Ontario, Cal., plant of the Edison Electric Appliance Co., built of smooth face Heath Hollow Tile.

—the judgment of "Big Business"

When the powerful buying power of the Edison Electric Appliance Co. looked around for the most efficient, most economical building material embodying all the elements of permanence and stability for the various units of their big plant at Ontario, California, it was natural their sound judgment should select

Smoothface "Heath" Hollow Tile

As its name implies, Smoothface Heath Tile carries a finish which eliminates the necessity of paint or stucco surfacing. Its soft coloring gives a most pleasing effect, while its economy in laying and its strength of construction make it the ideal building material. Fire-proof, weather-resisting and eliminating future repairs or maintenance, it is well called by eminent architects and engineers "the most economical form of permanent fire-proof construction."

Your contemplated building operations would be considerably and intelligently helped by reading our book on Heath Hollow Tile. Shall we mail your copy now?

SERVICE

Back of every conspicuous success in business there is embodied a dominant idea.

And if that idea has within its confines the ideal of intelligently serving others, no human force can stop its progress, because all men naturally rally to its support.

It has always been the ideal of the Blue Diamond Plaster Company to intelligently and unselfishly serve the builders and contractors who know and can appreciate the value of dependability.

SECOND TRADE TRIP PLANNED.

Business Men Will Travel in Western Mexico.

Date Fixed for February 7, to Last Twelve Days.

Arizona to be Also Annexed to Local Trade Zone.

Arrangements and itinerary for a second peaceful invasion and trade-establishing excursion of Mexico have been completed by the Chamber of Commerce, as the natural result of the success attending the first excursion that extended Los Angeles' glad hand to the Obregon administration at the inaugural ceremonies. Definite establishment of enlarged trade relations, both for export and import, is regarded as the outcome, as it is the purpose, of the business houses participating.

At 6 p.m., February 7, the whistle will blow for the second Chamber of Commerce excursion to Mexico—this one to go down the West Coast into the Mexican tropics.

This will also be an Arizona excursion, and an opportunity will be given to make acquaintances and business connections in Phoenix, Tucson and Nogales, three of the best cities of Arizona.

There has been such an enthusiastic demand for a second excursion, this time to another part of Mexico, that the board of directors unhesitatingly approved a recommendation for this trip. It was found necessary to make the trip early in February, as its success might have been hampered if delayed until Lent. The Nogales Chamber of Commerce also is planning a West Coast excursion.

The excursion will traverse, besides the State of Arizona in the United States, the States of Sonora, Sinaloa and Nayarit in Mexico. The first excursion was through the States of Central Mexico and over the high plateaux of that region, much of which was similar to Arizona in appearance. The second will be along the coast in low altitudes, much of it tropical in appearance.

THE ITINERARY.

Besides visiting the Arizona cities named, the excursion will take in the principal cities of the West Mexcan coast, including Hermosillo, the capital of Sonora; Guaymas, the seaport of the Upper Gulf of California region; Esperanza, the gateway to the rich Yaqui Valley; Navajoa; San Blas; Culiacan, capital of Sinaloa; Mazatlan, the principal seaport and largest city on the entire west coast of Mexico; and Ocoponeta and Ruiz, in the beautiful tropical region beyond Mazatlan, and possibly to Tepic.

The excursion will make possible three objects: first to build up trade with the states and cities named; second, to study the investment possibilities of the west coast region, and third, to enjoy the scenery of a tropical region.

The trip will be made by special train similar to the one that recently went to Mexico City, and will occupy about twelve days.

It was first planned to go by water, but this idea had to be abandoned, as nearly four weeks would have been necessary to accomplish the objects sought.

The rates will be $225 for an upper berth, $235 for a lower berth, $260 for a compartment ticket, and $275 for a drawing-room, these rates to cover railroad fare, Pullman fare and meals.

Reservations may be made at any time after 10 o'clock a.m. January 17.

LONG BEACH'S INDUSTRIES.

To be Exhibited First Week in February; Many Attractions Provided.

LONG BEACH, Jan. 15.—Practically the entire population of Long Beach is anxiously awaiting an Industrial Exposition to be held in the municipal auditorium, that city, the week beginning January 31. The show, which, in point of exhibits and attendance of visitors is expected to eclipse anything ever held here, is under the auspices of the Long Beach Chamber of Commerce and the Daily Telegram. A hundred industrial enterprises, representing an invested capital of approximately $16,000,000, will exhibit their products. Practically all the industrial output of the city will be featured.

The active committee in charge of the exposition is headed by Frank C. Roberts, one of the publishers of the Daily Telegram. John F. Craig, founder of the Long Beach Shipbuilding Company, is first vice-president, and J. A. Rominger, Senator from the Long Beach district, is second vice-president. Charles A. Wiley, president of the Exchange National Bank, is treasurer, and William A. Graef is secretary.

A flood of inquiries, coming not only from all sections of California, but from Canada, Middle Western and eastern points, gives promise of an influx of visitors greater than anything hitherto experienced in the history of Long Beach. This has resulted from the generous co-operation of a long list of newspapers and the large transportation companies. That all Southern California will benefit from the large attendance at the exposition is an assured fact.

FORMAL OPENING.

The opening will be at 8 o'clock the morning of Monday January 31, but the formal opening exercises will be held the evening of that date. The welcoming address will be delivered by Hon. Louis N. Whealton, former Mayor, and he will be followed by Frank C. Roberts, editor of the Telegram. A special event will be Consuls' Day, which is set for Friday, February 4. All consuls resident in Southern California have been invited for that occasion and they will be welcomed by Postmaster Walter J. Desmond.

A large delegation, headed by a military band, will be sent by San Pedro Thursday and these visitors will be received by a special committee to be named by the Chamber of Commerce.

The climax of the exposition will be Mayors' Day, Saturday, February 5. Chief executives of more than a hundred California cities have been invited for that event. The address of welcome will be delivered by Hon. W. T. Lisenby, Mayor of the city.

Aside from the business and industrial part of the exposition, special programs will be put on each afternoon and evening. Professional singers, dancers and movie stars will hold the spot light for these events. L. L. Frey is in charge of the music program and he has engaged the best talent possible to procure.

The decorations for the event will be most elaborate. The auditorium will be a setting for greenery, consisting largely of palms, ferns and potted plants; while blooming flowers, alternating with flags and bunting, will give the desired touch of warmth. The entire effect will be designed with the thought of carrying out the California idea.

New Type of Motor Invented by Local Man.

An electrical invention simplifying the original winding and rewinding of small alternating-current motors, which will have important bearing on cost of production and length of service of the fractional horsepower motors and thereby largely increase their usefulness, has been perfected by Alexander Zarky, of 930 West Temple street, a mechanic who has been using his spare time for years to its development. The invention has the indorsement of electrical experts connected with leading electrical concerns of this city.

The invention consists of a removable core, in place of the present type of one-piece core; the new type making possible the winding of alternating current dynamo machinery in the same way as is the present practice with direct current machines, viz: on the outside, instead of the inside of the bore, and with preinsulated form-wound coils, instead of by hand process. This invention reduces labor cost of original construction and makes it possible to rewind, simply and expeditiously, the stator, which is at present impracticable because of the inaccessibility for rewinding purposes.

The chief value of the invention lies in its applicability to small or fractional power units, and the savings effected through rewinding small induction motors which has heretofore been too expensive to be practical, due to the inaccessibility of the slots on account of the smallness of the bore. By the new process, the inner core of the stator being removable, the life of the small motors is extended indefinitely, through the simplified rewinding.

FOR TULARE BANK.

Building Being Altered and Improved for New Institution.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

TULARE, Jan. 14.—Work has begun on remodeling the building at K and Kern streets to be occupied by the new Farmers' State Bank. All of the partitions on the lower floor are to be removed, making one large room.

A sum of $40,000 will be expended in rearranging and improving the building. A crew of men are now at work and will continue until the bank is ready for occupancy.

The latest addition to Tulare's tailoring establishments is that of C. R. Swain, who has moved into the room formerly occupied by the bicycle shop on Tulare street. Hat blocking is to be a special feature of the new business, which will be one of the most modern of its kind in the city.

J. M. Fields is making extensive improvements on the ranch north of Tulare, which he recently purchased from Charles C. Turner. It is Mr. Fields's intention to have one of the most beautiful and convenient country homes in Tulare county. Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Laughton, recent arrivals from Reno, Nev., are moving to their ranch, north of town. The property was formerly owned by Charles A. Smith.

BIGGEST BUILDING YEAR FOR POMONA.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

POMONA, Jan. 15. — A building record never before equaled in the history of the city was made by Pomona during the year 1920, the grand total of construction permits of all kinds being $793,752. This record has rarely been approached, although in 1910 and 1911, due to the building of several large Pomona churches, the value of permits was in excess of $770,000 each year.

The erection of the new Y.M.C.A. Building, now under construction, was the largest permit issued during the year, amounting to $175,000 and bringing the total for the month of June up to $188,000, the highest record for any month. With this one permit eliminated, September ranked as the month in which the greatest amount of building actually got under way. Forty permits were issued during December, eleven for new houses, eleven for garages, two for poultry houses, one for a brick block and fifteen for alterations and repairs.

CLEVELAND MECCA OF EXPORTERS.

Los Angeles Delegation to Interpret This City as a World Trade Port.

Los Angeles may get next year's convention of the National Foreign Trade Association if the local delegates bestir themselves at this year's convention, which is to be held in Cleveland early in May. As the Pacific Coast metropolis, with the fastest-growing marine interests of any American port, such a gathering here would be of great and lasting benefit to this port and to the country at large, in establishing the status of Los Angeles in the American shipping mind.

"Los Angeles sent a trainload of delegates to the last national convention, held in San Francisco. Since then Los Angeles has become advertised to the world as the largest city on the Pacific shores of the Western Hemisphere, and it is up to us to take a place of leadership commensurate with our size," is the declaration of the Chamber of Commerce.

"Trade among nations is being developed as never before in the world's history. The Cleveland convention will be attended by the greatest business men in America, thousands of them, including the great industrial chiefs. Opportunity, therefore, will be presented to Los Angeles to accomplish three main objects at Cleveland:

"First, to learn many new things about foreign markets and how to carry on foreign trade; second, to advertise itself as a world market by showing its interest in world commerce, and third, to impress upon the captains of industry of America the enterprise and advantages of Los Angeles in an industrial way, and to bring the next national convention to this city. Los Angeles should send a big delegation to Cleveland and make itself heard in the convention."

BUILDING NOVEL BUNGALOW HOTEL.

UNIQUE STRUCTURE WILL BE BUILT ON SITE LOCATED ON VENICE BOULEVARD.

Corbert & Sprague, architects and builders, have under construction a distinctive bungalow-hotel for Mrs. Lordondo S. Rolland. The plans call for a twenty-six unit group of bungalows, situated on a four-acre plat of land, located on the Venice Boulevard, midway between Culver City and Venice. The bungalow-hotel will be known as the Casa Del Mar, and construction calls for twenty-five five-room modern bungalows, with an administration building in the center of twelve rooms.

The surrounding bungalows will have an exterior finish of cement and sandstone, with red brick roof. The ten bungalows fronting on Venice Boulevard, on either side of the central main entrance to the administration building, will be finished inside in French gray, and the remaining fifteen finished in mahogany. The administration building will house the main dining hall, for patrons who do not desire to enter into the housekeeping scheme in individual bungalows, and on the same floor it is also planned to install a dance floor, with lounging-room. On the second floor will be located apartments and a wide curved veranda, commanding a view of the valley, Baldwin Hills and, in clear weather, the Pacific Ocean.

The grounds contain a wonderful variety of flowers and rare tropical shrubs, including several Babylonian acacia, which blooms at Christmas time, and is closely connected with Biblical history. On either side of the administration building there will be a summer-house of cypress trees, growing close and overlapping one another, forming a complete surrounding wall, and inclosing comfortable lounging space, with marble fountain and goldfish pool. Mrs. Rolland plans to furnish potted plants for the individual bungalows.

The garages, located on the rear of the grounds, will be reached by a horseshoe driveway, with entrance and outlet on either side of the bungalow-hotel. The contract calls for the expenditure of some $75,000. The lease for this distinctive rental property is being handled by the Harry H. Culver organization, Culver City, which firm reports spirited bidding for an option on this desirable property.

NEW BOARDS ARE BEING ORGANIZED

Great Progress has Been Made During Past Month.

Southern California Realtors to Join State Body.

Will Make Influence Felt at Sacramento.

The recent convention of the California Real Estate Association held here is exerting a widespread influence throughout Southern California in the formation of new and active realty boards, which will become members of both the State and national associations, according to C. C. C. Tatum. Mr. Tatum, first vice-president of the State association, is in active charge of the organization of new real estate boards in the various communities of Southern California. In regard to the progress which has been made along this line since the convention in December Mr. Tatum said yesterday:

"There has been a wonderful new interest shown recently in the work of our organization; the Los Angeles convention certainly started something. Old realty boards have taken on new life and many new ones are being organized.

"Officers of the Pasadena, Long Beach, Santa Ana and San Diego boards have joined with Los Angeles men in frequent visits to other cities and towns. A spirit of good-fellowship has been developed. It is realized fully that our interests are mutual in many respects and that by getting together we can be of great help to each other. By advocating measures in the interest of taxpayers, we find bankers and land owners willing and anxious to give their sympathy and support.

NEW BOARDS.

"The San Diego Realty Board has been reorganized and is now growing rapidly. It co-operates fully with the State association. It holds weekly meetings and considers many matters of vital importance to the profession as well as in the general advancement of the city. Monrovia real estate men have just completed plans for an active board and at Anaheim last week there was an enthusiastic meeting held, which will result in the formation of a strong board there. Glendale, Van Nuys and other near-by cities have live organizations. We expect early action along the same lines at Whittier, Pomona, San Bernardino and in Imperial Valley.

"At Santa Ana the annual meeting of the realty board was held last week. It was a splendid one. Santa Ana realtors have a large representation in the State association and have voted unanimously to join the national association. They have already taken steps to have a good delegation attend the national convention in Chicago in July, and will take with them a carload of products to show to the 5000 realtors who will be there from many cities what is being done agriculturally in Orange county.

CONSTRUCTIVE WORK.

"The splendid program at our recent annual convention has given proof that the State association is engaged in constructive work which will bring satisfactory results. The influence of the organization will be felt at Sacramento during the next sixty days.

"Many important resolutions were adopted at the annual convention. Many others were referred to the board of directors, who will act upon them at the next meeting, January 22.

"The association has twenty-five directors, representing various districts in the State. They are on the job all the time and subject to call for any work necessary to uphold the ideals of the profession and advance the usefulness of the association.

"Southern California directors are: C. P. Austin, Santa Barbara; J. H. Dorn, Pasadena; Percy Goodwin, San Diego; Thomas McManus, Bakersfield; J. G. Munholland, Long Beach; Frank C. Nye, Riverside; J. C. Wallace, Santa Ana; W. W. Mines, O. A. Vickery, Frank Ryan and C. C. C. Tatum, Los Angeles."

FOUR wells are going down near the Globe Petroleum leases in the booming Huntington Beach Field.

To the northeast of the Bolsa Chica and about 1600 feet from Globe is Standard A7—down better than 700. Still closer to the Globe holdings are the wells of Western Union, Amalgamated and Union. All are making rapid progress.

Each increases the value of the near-by Globe Petroleum leases.

Globe Petroleum has selected three drilling sites and will soon start on Site No. 1.

This Corporation has 32 producing wells distributed in ten other fields. The monthly production approximates 7000 barrels.

Local Woman is a National Frock Maker.

The fame of Los Angeles for the manufacture of children's and women's apparel seems to have found special distinction in the lines of rompers and play suits for little tots, several concerns specializing in these having made distinguished successes in the last three years.

Mrs. Florence M. Benedict of Santa Monica, who has just returned from a selling trip to San Francisco, reports the buyers of these lines as looking to Los Angeles not only as the one best place to buy such apparel, but as visiting Los Angeles in preference to visiting the eastern factory centers in search of the latest and most attractive rompers and dresses.

From a start made a few years ago by designing frocks for her own growing family, Mrs. Benedict has developed a shop employing about forty hands the year round in turning out what has come to be known in trade parlance as the "Benedict Models," which are all hand-made and are designed by herself as new ideas and needs are presented. The shop is at Sixth and Strand streets, in a building 45 by 45 feet, specially built for comfort of the women and girls who ply their needles under its roof.

While no effort has yet been made for quantity production, these Benedict models have found a decided vogue through the tourists, and they are in demand and being sold in the better stores as far East as New York and Toronto. It is an "infant" industry for Santa Monica that is based entirely on style and quality, being the highest-priced in the trade.

Will Erect Stores on West Seventh.

The lease of the property at the northeast corner of Seventh and Kip streets to William Wiseman for a period of fifteen years is reported by Joe Toplitzky, local realtor, through whom the transaction was handled. This property, owned by Mrs. Sarah E. Cheney, has a frontage of seventy feet on Seventh street, with a depth of 100 feet on Kip street. Mr. Wiseman plans the erection, immediately of a class C building, two stories in height. The first floor will be divided into three storerooms, and the second story will be comprised of loft space.

BIG YEAR'S RECORD.

New Construction Work at Van Nuys Over Half Million in Value.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

VAN NUYS, Jan. 15.—The total permits issued by the Los Angeles city building department for residences, business blocks, poultry houses, garages and miscellaneous structures in the Van Nuys district, aggregated a sum of $638,424 for the year of 1920. This sum is nearly double the amount issued during the year 1919, which, up to that time, had been considered extraordinary.

During the year there were 192 dwellings erected and eighty-five poultry houses, increasing the capacity of the Van Nuys colony for approximately 100,000 hens. There were 227 structures of miscellaneous kinds, including the new business blocks on Sherman Way, several school bungalows, the handsome new garage built by G. A. Huffaker, barns and garages.

Ahead of Van Nuys for the new year is a $120,000 addition to the high school and an $80,000 or $100,000 addition to the grammar school, at least twenty-five new residences that were planned for early construction and possibilities of a large three-story business block, a hotel building and a fine new theater building.

MAIN-STREET THEATER LEASED TO EASTERNERS

The Dalton Bros., operators of a chain of theaters in the Middle West, have taken a four-and-one-half-year lease on the Follies Theater at 337 South Main street for $15,000. The lease on the property was formerly owned by Alpine & Fargo. Alterations are now being made on the building, and the auditorium of the theater will be redecorated. When these changes are completed, the theater will be opened with a musical show, now en route from the East, headed by Will Debrow and Miss Billie Moody. The Dalton Bros. now operate the Empress Theater at Kansas City, Mo., and the Feature Theater of Dallas, Tex. According to F. O. Dalton, it is planned to take over several theaters in Southern California, to be operated by the firm, among which will be a larger theater in Los Angeles, capable of accommodating the companies now playing at the Kansas City and Dallas theaters. The lease was handled through Tom King, local realty broker.

Grain Prices Hit Toboggan in Windy City.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—Grain prices were on the slide today. Highest figures were made early and the close was at the lowest, showing losses of 4 cents on wheat, 3⅛@3¼ cents on corn, 2⅛@2⅜ cents on oats, 2⅞@4⅛ cents on rye and 1¼ cents on barley. A selling movement started at the opening and continued with little interruption. Buying was limited as the news on wheat was mixed and on corn and oats bearish. Oats sold at the lowest of the season and closed there.

Wheat prices finished the week ½ cent lower to the same as a week ago, the weakness being in March. Corn was off 2⅛@3⅛ cents and oats 2½@3 cents while rye gained ⅛@2⅜ cents.

Barley closed the same as a week ago.

British, German and Swiss buyers took advantage of the break in wheat to obtain supplies, taking 1,400,000 bushels, mostly at the gulf, at the same premiums as on Friday. This had no effect on the markets. Selling of a big line of corn credited to a St. Louis long and selling by local holders, hedgers and others put a big load on the market which forced prices off nearly 4 cents from the previous day's close and made a tame finish with a bearish feeling.

Oats were sold heavily by commission houses and had poor support. May dropped to the lowest of the season, 54⅜ cents, and practically closed there.

The Surest Gauge of Results

Judge a man by what he says, and there is sometimes a chance of making a mistake. Judge a man by what he DOES, and you have the most accurate "line" on him that it is possible to get.

The same thing applies to Oil Companies. When you get acquainted with one that is "up and doing"—that backs up its statements by DEEDS—and pulls its fair share of the load—you can put it down that THAT company is one well worth your while to TIE to.

Huntington Central Oil Company Operating in Huntington Beach

was granted its permit, December 21st, 1920. The derrick for its first well was completed by January 5th, 1921. The boilers and rotary drilling outfit were delivered by January 15th. Installation of equipment is now being rushed and spudding-in will take place at earliest possible date.

THINK IT OVER! From a mere beginning to a point where just a few more days will see the Company's rotary drill making hole—all in record time. Aside from its favorable location, in line with the big producing wells; aside from its low capitalization, meaning bigger dividend returns when oil is produced; aside from many other advantages, this fact ALONE stands out as something you can go by in judging the value of an investment in the HUNTINGTON CENTRAL OIL COMPANY.

The OPPORTUNITY to participate in THIS company is still open. You can secure stock at its par value while it lasts.

DAILY TRADE TALK.

Los Angeles the Sunshine Spot on Business Map; Week in Review.

BY CHAPIN HALL.

First reviews for the new year sound an optimistic note. Practical men who understand underlying affairs are confident that a turn for the better will soon manifest itself, but the fact remains that Southern California at present occupies the spot light as evidenced by a special bulletin and graph maps issued by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The first of these maps shows general conditions as of Dec. 13, 1919. About two-thirds of the country is white, indicating good business. This includes all of the Pacific Coast States.

The next map is timed to Aug. 14, 1920, and reveals a less favorable condition west of the Mississippi, where "fair" is the prevailing tinge. The Pacific States are still white with dark spots appearing in the Puget Sound country.

The latest graph is as of Dec. 11, 1920, and this map is practically one dark cloud. A vast majority of the States report conditions poor. A very few, including California, say fair, but in the southern part of this State in the niche devoted to Los Angeles, and perhaps Orange and Riverside counties, there is a tiny space of white absolutely the only light spot on the map, which provides a most impressive lesson of the happy position this section occupies in relation to the balance of the country.

WEEK IN REVIEW.

An advance copy of the January Review to be issued this week by the Citizens National Bank, remarks upon the strangeness of a situation which causes many to see prospects so blue when they really are so bright. There are two types of opinion; one distorted and biased, the result of coming out from under the hypnotic influence of high prices. The other is clear and broad because it is the result of an analysis of the elements which form the structure of the general business body. The latter, of course, is the better opinion to accept, for it is more or less scientifically formed, and in its formation any possible weakness of the business structure shows up as a combination of weakened factors, with the factors individually accounted for, and not as merely a total weakness.

We are actually tying the hands of our industries, according to this report, by continuing our buying strike. The decline in commodity prices between November 1 and December 1 was the largest of record, 13 per cent, and the total fall since February 1 amounts to 34.7 per cent.

Crop prices may be expected to show the usual seasonal advance from February on, for many items have fallen too fast to remain down long. The farmer is reminded that he was one of the very first to benefit from the mark up, and should not take too hardly the recession, especially if he provided a sinking fund during the fat years.

"As we go out into our 1921 activities," concludes this review, "it will be necessary that we surround ourselves with more fundamental facts, and that we think of them seriously and open-mindedly. We must be more interested in those general subjects which affect the common good. We must stop quarreling so much among ourselves and turn to serving, for it has been evident since the time that autocracy the throat of civilization that the progress of the white race depended very largely upon the extent to which the individual struck from his consciousness that false sense of gain through strife."

FOUNDATION SOUND.

The same note is observable everywhere. Perhaps one of the best expressions is that given voice by Frank W. Frueauff, vice-president of the Cities Service Company, who said:

"Those who talk panic or prolonged industrial depression have entirely overlooked the present situation in this country. There is no lack of actual demand for industrial products. This is not a time of overproduction. There is no scarity of the wherewithal to purchase. With the completion of the readjustment of commodity prices now under way, a flood of buying orders will come into the market.

"The slowing down of the wheels of industry is only temporary and they will soon again be fully turning with renewed energy. The important industrial companies will close 1920 with large surpluses, notwithstanding the interruption to business as a result of commodity price readjustment and the temporary falling off in demand for manufactured goods."

INVESTOR'S STANDPOINT.

From an investor's standpoint Albert W. Harris, president of the Harris Trust and Savings Bank of Chicago, which has a Los Angeles office, said in an address on Wednesday that "in view of the high interest rates now obtainable, there will be an incentive to secure as many long-time securities of recognized merit as his resources will permit; in fact, there should be greater incentive to save while such a favorable return is offered for savings. The demand will first naturally be for the stronger and more conservative securities and as a result prices on such securities will gradually advance, following the decline in bank rates and probably somewhat in advance.

"However, from no standpoint that I can see are we going to have what can be called hard times in this country in the near future. We have stored up more grain and more provisions of all kinds than we have any immediate use for; we have more money in the country than ever before; so how can we, as a country, have hard times, with plenty to eat and plenty to wear and money in the bank? We are richer and more prosperous than any other country on earth in the material things which we possess, and all we need to make us really contented is to return to an industrious and economical existence."

AT HOME.

Locally the situation is sound without material change during the week. Retail trade has been well sustained; investment bankers report a gradually strengthening demand and an absorption of some of the undigested securities left over from last year.

Declines in staples were less on the average than in immediately preceding weeks, indicating that some of them have about reached bottom.

A surprisingly optimistic balance sheet released yesterday by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of California, will probably have a stimulating effect as soon as the figures are digested. Business is generally good throughout Southern California, and bears out in every respect the findings of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

In food lines there have been material reductions in dairy products, but for the most part staples retain their firmness, and, dealers say, will probably continue to do so during the remainder of the winter.

Collections are reported fair to good; money is cautious, but not altogether elusive, and new financing is going forward within moderate limitations.

LOS ANGELES STOCKS.

There was little activity yesterday on the stock exchange, and price changes were without significance. There was activity in Republic Petroleum, which softened somewhat under the pressure, selling down to 36½ cents, and reacting to closing sales at 37 cents. Tom Reed remained steady around 1.16, and United Eastern at 2.40. Delaware Union sold at 23.00.

STATE INCOME TAX.

The probability of California business being required to pay income and profits taxes is looked upon ominously by Los Angeles interests which claim that they are already being taxed to death. Such a bill is already before the Legislature which does not provide for a personal property exemption. The measure, however, does exempt incomes derived by nonresidents from a source within the State.

The tax which it is proposed to collect is as follows:

(a) On the first $10,000 of taxable income or any part thereof, at the rate of 1 per cent.

(b) On the second $10,000 and up to and including $50,000, or any part thereof, at the rate of 2 per cent.

(c) On any sum of taxable income in excess of $50,000, or any part thereof, at the rate of 3 per cent.

Every individual or corporation making a United States income tax return under the provisions of the Federal Act falls within the scope of the proposed State law. The net income established by the Federal return, less the tax paid to the United States and income received from investments without the State thereunder, would be the net income for all purposes of determining the amount of tax due under the Brooks measure, unless otherwise provided therein.

FORUM DINNER.

A forum dinner is announced by the Los Angeles chapter, A.I.B., for next Tuesday evening at the City Club, at which time the subject will be: "Should the proposed union depot be built on the present site of the Southern Pacific station or at the Plaza?" Charles H. Toll, vice-president of the Security Trust and Savings Bank, will be the chairman of the evening. The Los Angeles chapter of the institute is experiencing a very successful year in its educational work with a study class enrollment of 695, including an excellent representation from every bank.

GREATEST CELERY CROP.

California led the celery production of the country in 1920 with more than 3000 carloads shipped from 5627 acres. High freight rates are likely to reduce acreage this year, for growers claim that eastern shipments show insufficient profit even for choice goods on an active market.

NEED RAIN.

Cattle growers in Southern California are expressing concern over the lateness of the rainy season. There has not been a good soaking downpour in a long time, and unless there is an early improvement the spring range will suffer. In other parts of the State there has been an abundance of rainfall.

PRODUCE MARKET IS FIRM AND UNCHANGED.

SHIPPING MARKET REFLECTS WEAKER TONE; EASTERN PRICES DECLINE.

A stronger undertone developed for lettuce on the local produce market yesterday, but this was practically the only change on the price list during the session. Demand was very slow, but arrivals were limited, with the result that the majority of the stock was moved at previous quotations. Good local lettuce was selling at a premium of about 25 cents per crate over the level of the preceding day, prices for this commodity ranging from $1 to $1.25 per field crate. Other lines closed firm and unchanged.

For potatoes both wholesale and carlot prices held firm throughout the day. The shipping market, however, reflected a slightly weaker undertone, although both lettuce and cauliflower were moving at the prices of the preceding day. Wire reports from the eastern markets, however, indicated a downward trend at Chicago, and other points, and local dealers are anticipating a sharp reaction early next week. Shipments of cauliflower and lettuce to Chicago during the past few days have been heavy, and it is believed that when these consignments arrive at their destination, there may be a sharp reaction.

FUTURE BARLEY TAKES SHARP SLUMP.

Lower prices prevailed for both milo and barley on the local market yesterday. There was no support offered for either cereal during the call, and the session closed with no sales transacted. The greatest weakness developed in the deferred deliveries of barley, the first half of February and the May shipments showing a slump of $1 per ton during the day, while the February delivery weakened to the extent of 75 cents. Cash barley held fairly steady, showing a decline of about 25 cents, but other nearby shipments were 50 cents to $1 per ton lower. Transit milo weakened 50 cents per ton, but the ten and twenty-day shipments showed a gain of 75 cents during the day.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The better tone of today's brief stock market session was the outcome mainly of further short covering, impelled by purchases of several standard issues, with Reading again the leader.

Trading was fairly broad, considering the relatively light dealings, independent steels, equipments, shippings and oils sharing in the movement, also specialties represented by international paper, American Woolen, Famous Players, tobacco and motor specialties.

Average gains of one to two points were held for the most part, final prices in noteworthy cases being at or near highest levels. Sales, 285,000 shares.

Weekly returns of the clearinghouse disclosed a decrease of about $11,200,000 in actual cash holdings, causing a deficit of slightly more than $2,000,000 in reserves. The previous deficit of the Associated Banks occurred in the final week of November, when a loss of more than $4,000,000 was reported.

Actual loans and discounts of the clearinghouse decreased $87,632,000, or almost $142,000,000, this year and reserves of members at the Federal Reserve Bank were lower by $17,361,000.

News embraced the passing or cutting of dividends by textile and leather companies and irregular foreign exchange markets and the conflicting trade reviews of the mercantile agencies. The bond market was sluggish and uncertain, a few Liberty issues making moderate gains while rails and industrials were inclined to ease. Total sales, par value, $5,925,000. Old United States government bonds were unchanged on call for the week.

WEEKLY FINANCIAL REVIEW.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The customary "January rise" which marked the early days of the new year in the securities market experienced a moderate reversal before the end of the first fortnight, due chiefly to a change in the technical situation.

Stocks of the more mercurial or speculative variety, especially those which featured the first week's bewildering movement, fell back and were less active.

Yet another reason for the reaction was found in the failure of the public to re-enter the market.

Industrial conditions, as applied to the steel industry, have undergone no change for the better, according to the adverse December tonnage report of the United States Steel Corporation. More recent surveys refer doubtfully to the immediate future of that industry.

That the directing forces of the leading industrial and merchandising concerns are committed to a policy of extreme caution was again demonstrated by the substitution of script and stock dividends for cash payments by Sears-Roebuck and Wilson Packing Company.

The most significant development was the fall of call loans to 6 per cent, this change being effected largely by offerings from interior sources at 5, 4½ and 4 per cent. Time funds relaxed to 6 1-4 per cent.

Principal foreign exchange rates reflected financial and political conditions in Britain and France with sympathetic reaction at other European centers. It is known that loans to Switzerland and other central nations, also to South American countries, are under active discussion and that readjustment of impending maturities by England and France is contemplated.

37 years of oil experience are behind this endorsement of Motor Oil and Refining Company's Huntington Beach activities!

A positive statement that Motor Oil's derrick stands on proven oil land! An enthusiastic recommendation of their Huntington Beach property, by a field operator who has drilled for Standard Oil in every field in the United States! These support our absolute confidence that Motor Oil's approved drilling campaign on TEN WELLS, and the decision to erect a HUNTINGTON BEACH REFINERY, must result in profit to stockholders far above the ordinary!

Motor Oil & Refining Company,
311 Pacific Finance Bldg.,
Los Angeles, California.

Dear Sir:

After Making a thorough examination of the properties of the MOTOR OIL & REFINING COMPANY I herewith tender you report on my findings:

All of the holdings of the company are exceptionally well located, all that is required is drilling a well on these properties and oil will be the reward.

Too much cannot be said regarding the Huntington Beach leases, and I will further state that in all of my 37 years experience in the largest oil fields in the world I have never seen any field that offered greater possibilities than the Huntington Beach Oil field.

There is no doubt but what the location in which you are drilling your first well IS DIRECTLY in the CENTER of this wonderful OIL POOL.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) C. H. PHILLIPS,
Supt. of Fields.

National Security Oil Co.

MORE OIL is produced each day, within the boundaries of KERN COUNTY, than in any other county in the United States. The great oil fields of Midway-Sunset, McKittrick, Kern River and Lost Hills-Belridge provide almost half of California's total output.

In this wonder district National Security has acquired 1920 acres— a large lease— discovered by OUR EXPERT!

So swiftly are new sections being proved up in KERN COUNTY, that thousands of acres have been leased within the last few weeks. Indications of new oil streaks are being constantly found.

OUR EXPERT selected these 1920 acres from 30,000. As surveyed by him an oil streak, approximately 3 miles long, underlies this holding. Experienced oil men endorse OUR EXPERT'S choice, and predict a GREAT OIL FIELD.

So remarkable is OUR EXPERT'S success in defining oil streaks that the announcement of this new acquisition brought more requests from stockholders for shares. The present limited issue at 75c, par value $1.00, is now publicly offered. These shares give YOU an interest in all wells drilled on the Kern County Lease of 1920 acres, and on the Company's 590 acres in Orange Co. Park (Well No. 1 now drilling).

HEAVY OVERSUBSCRIPTIONS of National Security shares previously makes it imperative that YOU call at our office at once, or mail the coupon. Shares are 75c, par $1.00 (non-assessable).

Fruit World review:

ORANGES.

LOS ANGELES, Jan 14.—The visible supply of oranges to the eastern trade is light and prices have continued to hold firm. Statistically, however, there are some clouds ahead. Shipments from California and Florida have been stimulated by the good opening of January markets and the amount rolling is increasing daily and will doubtless increase until a slump in the market again checks us.

The outlook for the coming week is about 25 cents lower per box, indicated by the taking and refusing of offers for stock rolling by eastern dealers to local shippers. The f.o.b. quotations are not actually changed, but the trade throughout the country is striking hard for easier f.o.b. prices in view of the quantities rolling. Weather conditions will help or mar the situation. Nominal f.o.b. prices for Southern California navels are $3 to $3.25 per box, usual terms and for desirable sizes. On sizes 216 to the box and smaller $2.75 is the asking quotation.

Cash buying free on board cars is very quiet.

The recent cold snap did no damage in any district.

Florida oranges are facing the price tangle that confronts California. Carlot buyers are reported very indifferent and growers and shippers very unwilling to accept the lower bids offered. The correct judgment must be rendered by the consuming public during the next seven days. Good weather will help out the producing factors and some snow and blizzard weather would suddenly precipitate price chaos.

In fine, we have about all the oranges rolling that the American markets can consume. Nothing can be gained by rushing any more at this time. Moderate shipments only should prevail.

LEMONS.

There is a better feeling in lemons, especially in markets of the Southern States where the small sizes are being ordered here on the basis of $2 to $2.25 per box free on board cars.

There are practically no foreign lemons on hand. One year ago this date the visible supply of foreign lemons was 41,000 boxes; two years ago 3000 boxes; three years ago 50,000 boxes.

It is the Fruit World's opinion that ocean shipping will be a great success and that California lemons will soon see brighter days.

FINANCIAL AND TRADE REVIEW.

hopeful of securing a government forestry station to be conducted by the University of California. The wave of economy which threatens to engulf the new Congress may delay the requested appropriation for the purpose, but the Associated Chambers of Congress proposes to keep the desirability of such a station actively to the forefront.

GOOD YEAR FOR STAATS.

The organization meeting of the directors of William R. Staats Company was held Friday, following the annual meeting of the company, and changes of local interest were made in the election of officers. J. E. Coggeshall of Pasadena, who has for fifteen years held the office of assistant treasurer of the company, was elected to the office of vice-president and T. K. Gally was made assistant treasurer. Robert G. Thomas, who has for several years been connected with the municipal bond-buying department of the company, was elected to the office of assistant secretary, while other officers were re-elected as follows: William R. Staats, chairman; John Earle Jardine, president; Frank C. Monroe, vice-president; John W. Edminson, vice-president; Lloyd R. Macy, vice-president; J. E. Coggeshall, vice-president; B. G. McMechen, treasurer; John S. Staats, secretary; T. K. Gally, assistant treasurer, and Robert G. Thomas, assistant secretary.

The company expects to take possession of its new building at 640 South Spring street next month and officials of the organization are anticipating easier money. It is their opinion that the liquidation, which has been forced because of a decline in commodity prices and the lessening of production, has reached a low point, which is a forerunner of a constructive period which should result in corresponding higher prices for bonds.

FAILURES OF A YEAR.

After four successive years of diminishing commercial mortality, the business reverses of 1920, as was not unnatural in a period marked by general economic readjustment, increased sharply in both number and liabilities. Exclusive of banking and other fiduciary suspensions, the defaults in the United States during the twelve months recently ended, as reported to R. G. Dun & Co., numbered 8881 and supplied $295,121,805 of indebtedness, as against only 6451 failures, involving $113,291,237, in the immediately preceding year.

The insolvencies of 1919, it is important to note, were fewer in number than those of any year in almost four decades, and the liabilities were the smallest since 1905. When allowance is made for these facts, and when it is also considered that the many new enterprises that were started last year enhanced the possibilities of financial embarrassment, the failure record of 1920 appears less conspicuously unfavorable. While the unusual number of large reverses is an unsatisfactory feature, the percentage of all failures to total firms in business is much below the average, and this is also true of the ratio of defaulted indebtedness to solvent payments through the clearinghouses.

Reporting 977 commercial failures for the year 1920, with an aggregate indebtedness of $22,390,818, the three Pacific States disclose an enlarged business mortality, the latest returns contrasting with 769 defaults in 1919 for $11,070,007, and with 1057 insolvencies for $13,940,651 in 1918. In every instance, more failures occurred last year than in 1919, there being an increase of 123 in Washington, thirty-eight in Oregon and forty-seven in California. A reduction in the California liabilities for the nine months, moreover, was followed by a sharp rise in the year's indebtedness, while much heavier totals appear in Washington and Oregon, the increase in Washington being especially marked.

"STRUCK OIL"
BY LOUIS J. WILDE

The latter part of this month, when we turn on the new well am going to take Virgil four or five other Community stockholders over and open their eyes, and yours, too.

I started out to get oil and got it. If you cannot help protect, and market and that which every other company is trying to get, will think telling the truth is no good.

Few days ago we wired the cash to Beaumont, Texas, and secured the Duckworth lease, from the gusher. This tract all belongs to the Community Oil Company, whether we fall down other big deal or not.

My layout was appraised by the Inspector for the Secretary of the State of Tex million dollars. You have read his statement. I think it worth five or ten times that Have been sick in bed most of the time since returning from Texas, from exposure and the field. When we started after oil, I underestimated the load, the worry, the work, the over-estimated my health and a lot of my friends.

Just received a shipment of oil direct from our well at Carthage, Texas; you all right to come and look at some of the real stuff. This oil is of high gravity, paraffin from a virgin territory, west slope of the Sabine Uplift.

Many years ago, I am told, Mr. E. L. Doheny, and the Union Oil Company jazzed over Christendom for a year or so looking for oil, and they had more hard luck stories than a couple armed paper hangers with prickly heat. Was informed one day Doheny said: "I am all in, down Better assess our stockholders about 50 per cent, hire a private car and go to New York to finance our deal." And I am told he did this very thing, much to the disgust of the stockholders cused him of murder, arson and skulduggery. He went just the same and put it over and then world and his stockholders the great Tampico Oil Fields. It is not necessary for me to Doheny to you today.

We are not going to assess anybody or tease anybody or do any unnatural Have got the goods, and if you folks don't want to participate and help carry the somebody else will in five minutes after February 1st, and if you don't think so and it would, advise that you find out about it. Now place a bet this time on your own

Every big animal in life is pestered with some kind of small animal life, such as cooties, or leeches. Nothing big alive—no matter how clean—can escape some insect, bug or little the hop-on habit. Like a little bark behind, it's all in the game and a part of the plan.

"Cut not men's throats with whisperings."—Ben Johnson.

"Jealousy is the apprehension of superiority."—By Shenstone.

"Jealousy is the green-eyed monster, which doth mock the meat it feeds Shakespeare.

"There would not be so many open mouths if there were not so many open ears."—

"The slander of some people is as great a recommendation as the praise of Fielding.

"Does not the law of Heaven say blood for blood, and he who taints it kills more than it."—Byron.

"Outside slanders cannot hurt me because I am right within."—"Wilde."

There is less than $75,000 of the Community Oil Stock at the original price of $1.00 be sold and after February 1st you are going to pay a new price for this stock.

Unwilling to acknowledge there is another gamble in the world like Com Company stock at $1.00 per share. You may class these remarks with all stere stock advertising if you like, and conclude there is little, if anything, of conse of it—but this is one time you bet on a thoroughbred, and after February 1st mine a new highwater mark price for Community Oil Shares.

WHAT WILL JUSTIFY AN ADVANCE?

Answering a perfectly sensible question—The Company was particular to tell the truth prospecting, scouting and wildcatting, and had nothinng but trouble, expense, handicaps offer. Now we have something worth while—something to brag about. We hold a new, wonderful oil field at Carthage, Panola County, Eastern Texas, at the high point lift—one of the most coveted spots today in the oil world. The Community Oil Comp of this whole business and plays the role of Directing Manager in the new field. Our company hold leases covering 22,000 acres, standard form No. 88, title perfect. recently been brought in a gusher. The discovery well, carrying 46 gravity oil, worth Preparations are being made for tankage and pipeline connections, for the production out, measuring and marketing. Pipe lines from Oklahoma and Breckenridge fields run within less than one mile of this new well, less than two miles from Santa Fe Railroad from the city limits of Carthage. Really, you need no other partriculars to grasp the

QUICK ACTION AND MONEY NECESSARY

We are trying hard to hold our short options and long advantages. more wells this month to hold some important leases within a few hundred Must build at once tanks for storage. Lay pips lines and prepare for big mediately. We need a little help quick this month. Every stockholder in Oil Company should take his part of $75,000.00 required to be raised for Securing us a strategic advantage and making permanent the valuable options tained. Take what you can, but be quick about it. No assessments or obligations levied or incurred even to accomplish these things. We have temporary most wonderful real high gravity oil producing territory, and in order to and get in production right, must dig up $75,000.00 quick or quit and let have it. More than a score of individuals and other big companies are to grab if we fall down. If we do not take up our option, and start two our tankage for the well already in, somebody else will in five minutes Only $75,000.00 is necessary, and only that amount will be sold at $1.00 telling what stock will be worth after this emergency amount is placed.

UNDERSTAND THIS NOTICE

You are being made acquainted with the facts and requirements. It is put to you. Do just as you like about it, because if we do not take advantage of body else will, and never in a thousand years will a similar opportunity present itself No other oil company on the continent has the optioned opportunities you have in carry on the work and help hold our part of the deal and not let it get away. We are seriously and those who help us through this month, will be in the preferred party.

I hereby recommend the granting of the charter for the amount sought.

FOR SALE—

CARLSBAD-BY-THE-SEA.

75 CARS OF PEAS

have been shipped by the Carlsbad Growers' Association to Eastern markets during the past sixty days, where they were sold at handsome profits.

Planting of Kentucky and Canadian Wonder Beans is now going on, and as these will reach the market ahead of other districts, we again expect fine profits.

When you consider that many products of the soil are not finding a profitable market during the present period of deflation, you must admit that Carlsbad Irrigated Lands, producing these OUT OF SEASON crops that find a hungry and profitable market, have real value.

We sold over $275,000 of this land last year without "Hurrah," and from all indications we will sell the remainder this year.

If you are in the market for a piece of land where two profitable crops a year are pretty sure, under the most pleasant living conditions, then by all means select Carlsbad.

GOVERNMENT LANDS—

NEVADA VALLEY'S AGRICULTURAL LANDS 640 acres (one mile square,) for every citizen, male or female, residence not required (Pittman Act.) Located in Southern Nevada, opposite California and Arizona. Most liberal law ever passed relating to public lands, and will make an agricultural State out of a former mining country. If you have used your homestead or desert entry rights, it does not prevent your making a Pittman application. Your forefathers had no such opportunity to get land. Many Nevada Valleys are not surpassed anywhere. The land, climate, soil and all are hard to equal. Nothing like it in California, to be had at many times the price. Californians are taking this land so fast that good locations are daily getting more scarce. The Government Land Office township plats tell the story of the public's great activity in filing; come in and look them over. Every day you wait you are farther away from growing towns, schools, railroads, national automobile highways, etc. In richness of soil, water conditions, etc., you cannot find more promising acreage. Climate ideal, little frost, location fee low, every reasonable assistance to approved bona fide pioneer developers. Level land, easily cleared and plowed. Save your time and gasoline looking for an equal show in California. Nevada is the last chance for you to get something worth while, where you may pioneer, develop and then get the California high prices. Great stock country; they winter on open range; no supplementary feeding. Land now covered with heavy native grasses and grows alfalfa, cotton, corn, grains, potatoes, melons, grapes, nuts, all fruits except citrus, sugar beets, all general farm crops, everything you see in Southern California in great luxuriance. Cheap power from the government dam in the Colorado River. Shallow pumping wells and deeper artesian or flowing wells at reasonable cost. Soil is moisture retaining, heavy sandy and Colorado loam. No sandstorms, no alkali, adobe or boulders on our locations. Relinquishment sellers please do not apply. New well drilling outfit, Holt tractor, full equipment tools, plows, available to our locators at low cost. One day only needed to see. Take night train, examine land next day, return same night. Auto parties going this week; come along. Ranch houses (miner's homes sold for taxes,) good condition, $75 to $200 while they last. For samples, soil, crops, photographs, full information, call

The same plan which is bringing such quick success to so many will likewise enable you to finance your business in the shortest time and at the smallest cost.
Many things are possible which you may not know anything about, and it will not cost you anything to learn some things which I have discovered.

TO THE Stranger within our Gates:
When you pick up today's paper and scan these columns you will come to the conclusion that nearly everything that is advertised is in the hands of brokers, and you possibly will think, like the Irishman, when he said, "Every man is as good as the other and a darned sight better." We are not going to tell you how good we are, but will give you what we believe to be the real facts about any proposition that we have to offer, and can truthfully state that the suggestions and advice we have given during the past years have been worth many dollars to newcomers. It won't cost you anything to talk to us and we shall be glad to give you the benefit of our eight years' experience in this business, if you are earnestly endeavoring to get located.

It has the very best fountain and show cases, has a long lease at $50 a month, located on a fine corner; has a complete candy making equipment, but is not necessary to be a candy maker, as the present owner is clearing good money without any manufacturing or lunches. WRECKS ARE INCREASING.

Wild and Reckless Driving is Worse Than Ever.

Half a Million a Month Cost of Repairing Cars.

January Apparently Expects to Break Records.

Motorists here are smashing up 1200 more cars every month than they did for the same period fourteen months ago.

According to figures compiled yesterday by officials of the Automobile Club of Southern California from police records and from the club's interinsurance exchange, the wave of recklessness which had its inception last August has continued unabated.

It looks like January would exceed all previous months in the number of autos smashed and wrecked unless a sudden halt is called somewhere, say the officials.

December, to date, holds the record with 2229 wrecks in Los Angeles and hereabouts. That is 1200 more than were recorded a little over a year ago.

According to Auto Club insurance department figures, it is costing motorists in this vicinity $500,000 every month to repair the damage done to machines in wrecks. Motorists have done more than $1,500,060 worth of damage to automobiles by smashing them up in the last three months.

As an indication of the amount of financial precaution taken by car owners against the wrath of recklessness, club insurance figures are quoted, showing that more than 35,000 automobile owners have taken out policies with the club alone in Los Angeles and vicinity, which is about one-sixth of the number of cars registered throughout Southern California.

To date the traffic bureau of police headquarters has recorded 1010 accidents for the month of January, while the Automobile Club has received reports on more than 500 smash-ups in regard to insurance adjustments. It's a sad tale, mates.

The majority of serious accidents of recent date have been concerned largely with grade crossings—motorists either running into railroad trains or having railroad trains run into them.

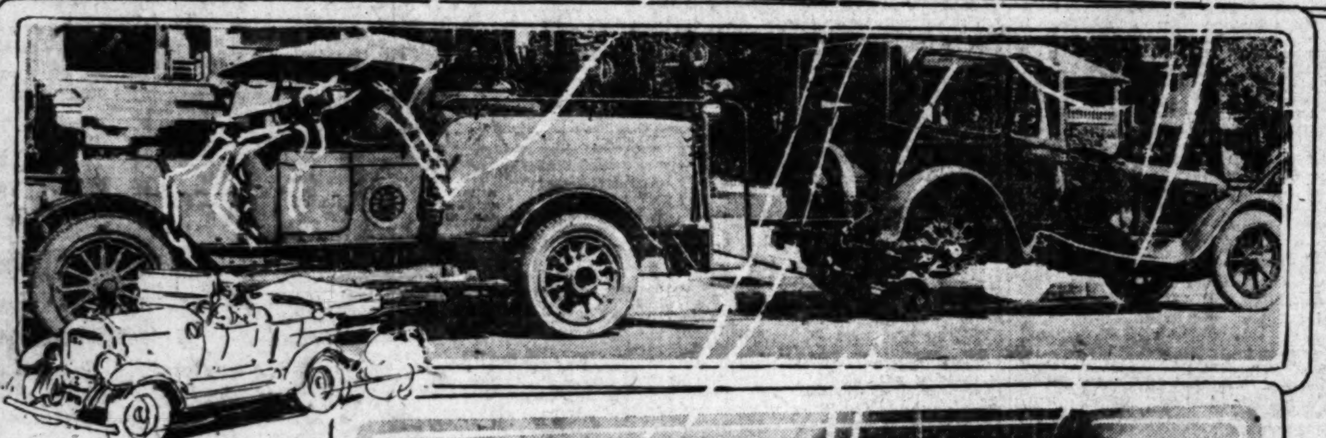
According to Standish L. Mitchell, secretary of the Auto Club, the burden of blame for the greatest number of recent accidents rests with the drivers of the cars themselves in trying to beat a train or electric car to a crossing—and failing in the attempt.

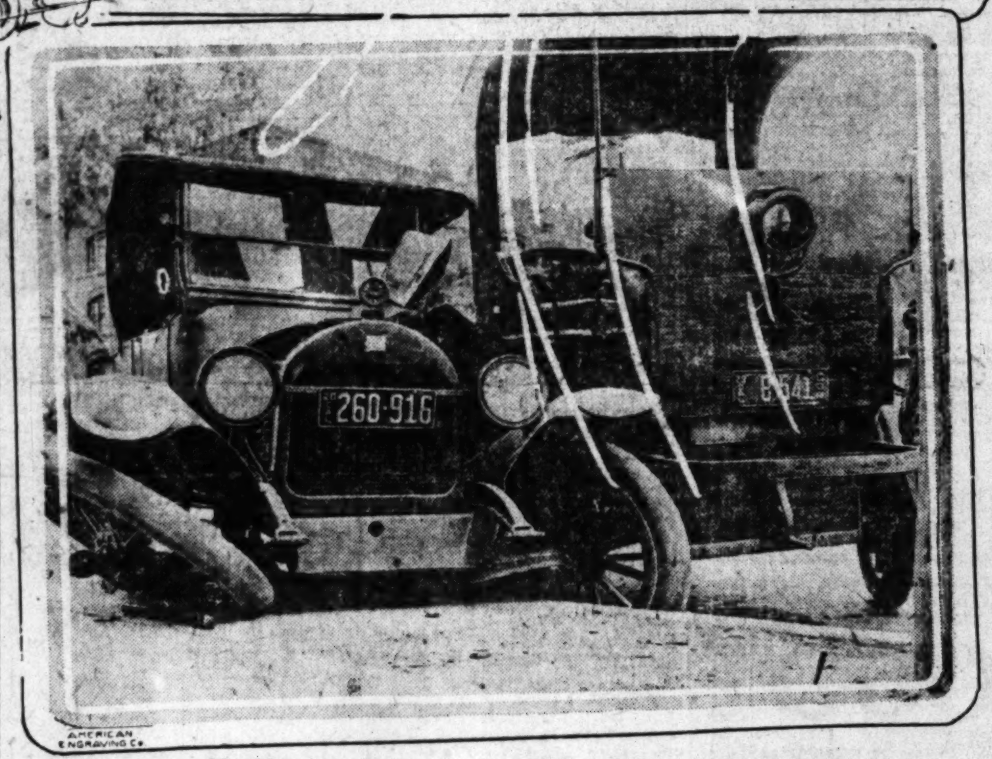
As an indication of the recent increase in smash-ups, Secretary Mitchell quotes figures from the club insurance departments showing the number of smashes for October, November and December, as follows:

In October there were 1529 smashed cars reported to the Auto Club's insurance officials for adjustment in all Southern California. In November, this figure jumped to 1567. In December there were 1775 machines reported for repairs.

It cost $51,421 to repair smashed cars reported to the club in October $48,103 in November and $59,436 in December. This is about one-tenth of the cost for the entire southern part of the State, indicating the tremendous percentage of insurance business here which is handled by the Automobile Club.

When the number of smash-ups is going to decrease depends largely upon the determination of the individual not to have any more accidents so far as he is concerned—it is no fault but the individual reckless driver's in most cases, say club officials, and it will have to be stopped at its source, which is with the individual.





Mr. Motorist—Take a Look at This and Then Be Careful.

Here are a few photographs of the collection owned by the Inter-Insurance Exchange of the Automobile Club of Southern California showing what carelessness in handling an automobile will do to it.

Wants a Tax on Tires to Build Roads.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 15.—More woe for the automobile owner!

Senator Walter Eden of Santa Ana advocates a tax on automobile tires for the purpose of raising additional State revenue, particularly for use in keeping up the highways of California.

Eden declares he believes a law could bed rawn to provide for taxing tires according to their size. Such a law, he says, would compel motorists who use the highways the most to pay for their upkeep accordingly.

Eden added:

"I think a tax on tires would prove the best way to raise revenue from the motoring public for the upkeep of the State's highways. However, I have not determined as yet whether I shall introduce such a measure."

DEALERS YELLING FOR REAL ECONOMY.

Strict economy in the conduct of the State government of California was urged by the Los Angeles Motor Car Dealers Association in resolutions adopted at the last meeting of the association. The resolutions were drawn following the unanimous acceptance of motion to such effect introduced by Watt Moreland, and were wired to Sacramento.

Protest against the passage of the Anthony resolution pending in Congress was likewise wired to the Southern California Representatives at Washington. The Anthony measure provides for the immediate sale of the surplus army trucks, on the open market, though the trucks have been asked for by the Postal Department to motorize the mail service, and could be made good use of in that service.

SPRINT RACES COMING UP.

Final Speedway Event of Winter Season to be Held in February.

Five sprint races with a total of 150 miles of speed will be held on the big mile-and-a-quarter basin of the Los Angeles Speedway Association, February 22. This event will open the 1921 championship season and close the local winter season. The speed kings will not reappear on the local track until late in the fall.

According to Secretary-manager A. M. Young, the program will be divided into four twenty-five-mile heats and a fifty-mile final, and everybody who saw the three fifty-mile sprint races on the track just about a year ago, will rise up on their hind legs and testify that the pop-eyed finish of the first and final heats were the greatest thrills they ever saw.

Chairman Richard Kennerdell of the contest board of the A.A.A. has sanctioned the race and has notified the local authorities that he will assign a large collection of championship points, the first for 1921, to be scrambled for by the drivers. Just how many he will assign and how they will be divided has not yet been decided, nor has the division of the tall stack of iron dollars, hung up in the form of prize money, been announced as yet.

Ralph De Palma, who was unable to compete in the Thanksgiving Day race, because his Ballot was in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean on the day of the big event, has had his fast car out on the track half a dozen times in private and is said to have shown more speed than any of the little Deusenberg creations in buzzing around the big tureen. De Palma has succeeded in doing all of his practice without the assistance of the customary audience and all of the other drivers are frothing at the mouth at their inability to learn his exact speed.

Tommy Milton, cheated of his chance to grab the 1920 speed title by the failure of his machine right at the start of the Turkey Day race, has been working to beat the band on it and will have his fast little Chevrolet Special in good shape for the sprint struggle. Eddie Hearne, who looked like a certainty for second place in the Turkey Day event up to the last five laps, is likewise in shape for the battle.

In addition to the three previously mentioned there will be the entire Duesenberg team of Jimmy Murphy, Roscoe Sarles and Eddie Miller, with the possibility of a fourth enery, Joe Thomas, in a little four-cylinder Frontenac and Art Thiele in a Thiele Special. No "junk" will be allowed in the sprint events as slow cars would merely gum up the proceedings for the good cars.

While the final decision has not yet been made, it is understood that a scheme will be worked out whereby the winner of each heat automatically qualifies for the final heat and remains out of the succeeding preliminaries. Winners of the other places in heats and final will probably get their share of money and championship points and everything indicates a wild and woolly afternoon for the fans.

Mexican Motor Drivers Would Join the A.A.A.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Inquiry has been received by the American Automobile Association from the Automobile Club of Mexico as to affiliation. The communication from Mexico City is the result of a recommendation by the Automobile Club of Jalisco, which has its headquarters in Guadalajara and has been an A.A.A. member for years.

The El Paso Automobile Club has presented repeatedly to the Mexican government the value of a highway to the Mexican capital as a means of creating a great volume of international road travel and also serving to solidify relations between the two countries.

Since the A.A.A. has accepted clubs from New Brunswick and Mexico, it is assumed that the application from Mexico City will receive favorable consideration. Among the several hundred clubs in the A.A.A. list is the Hawaii Automobile Club of Hilo, added during the past year.

License-Plates for 1921 About Ready for Us.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 15.—After several weeks of preparation, Charles J. Chenu, superintendent of the State Motor Vehicle Department, announces the department is ready for the rush of business that will come with the issuing of 1921 license plates, beginning February 1.

Additional space has been provided in headquarters here, and additions have been made to the clerical force. Applications already are coming in and by the middle of the month, there will be a flood of letters.

An order has been placed for 500,000 pleasure, automobile license plates, 50,000 commercial plates, and 25,000 motorcycle plates. There also will be other plates for dealers, and cars that are exempt.

Gasoline Tax Creates a Howl in Sacramento.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 15 — A storm of protest has broken over the plan of Senator E. P. Sample of San Diego to levy a tax of 1 cent per gallon on all gasoline and distillate sold in California for automobiles, trucks and tractors.

Senator J. A. Rominger, of Long Beach, Tuesday received twelve telegrams from citizens and automobile dealers in his district, protesting against the proposed tax.

The general trend of the complaints is that the automobile industry already is overburdened, and that the tax would be unjust and discriminatory. One protestant declared a "laboring man could not afford to pay the tax."

Admires Auto Stage System in California.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

REDLANDS, Jan. 15.—Southern California is the best served in transportation of any section in the country, according to B. W. Ridencur of New York City, who, according to his admission, "travels and that's about all." Mr. Ridenour says that the system of carrying passengers in California is by far the best he has ever seen.

"I had heard, of course, of your wonderful network of electric railways and was interested in them," he said, "but something I had not heard of was the way in which your highways are kept up and used as carriers for the public."

Mr. Ridenour says that there is no section that he has ever visited where there are big busses plying from big city to big city, from small city to small city, and from village to hamlet as in Southern California. He was so interested that he gathered a wonderful lot of statistics showing that thousands of persons travel in automobiles over the highways every day.

He says that the system of highways is well understood to be the best there is, but he does not believe that one person in a thousand outside of California realizes the possibility of the motor bus as a common carrier of passengers.

NEW FOUR SHOWN FOR FIRST TIME.

One of the few new models to be exhibited at the New York show this year was the new four-cylinder R. and V. Knight, which the Root and VanDervoort Engineering Company has just placed in production along with their six-cylinder Knight. Eastern advices declare that the new four attracted a great deal of attention at the national exhibit. On the same day that the news came of the hit that the car had created at New York, the W. B. Conditt Company, local distributors, received advices that their first carload of fours had left the factory for Los Angeles. Conditt has been anxiously awaiting this car for several months, and hopes to have the four on display in ten days or so.

REGARD SALÓN AS A SUCCESS.

New York Show Surpasses All Previous Efforts.

Americanization Watchword of Manufacturers.

Enclosed Bodies Particularly Well Advanced.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Jan. 15.—The show just closed was without a doubt the largest ever held in New York. Four floors of the Grand Central Palace were filled with motor cars and accessories. Greater crowds attended than ever before. It is impossible to learn the number of cars sold during the exhibition but each company reports great success.

The automobiles exhibited did not vary from those of last year's show. The inclination seems to be to standardize the pleasure cars of America. There were perhaps not more than fifteen radical changes among the eighty-nine different makes. All cars were stream-lined and more comfortable. Many were dressed in brilliant colors. Many comforting devices were found in the accessories.

The manufacturers are concentrating on fours, sixes and eights. The popular-priced cars were the most sought by the buyers. The public wants slower and more comfortable motors, some dealers argue, while others assert that the buyers want more sped and more comfort, too. The fours and and sixes predominated the show.

The show just closed was America's answer to the challenge of the French show at Paris and the British national show at Olympia and "the white city." The results of last year's work were found, the features being in the lines of closed bodies, even in the low-priced and medium-priced cars which are becoming more beautiful, the bodies low, roomy, shapely, rather than the cumbersome and uncomfortable closed types of former years. This was particularly noticed in the sedan and coupe styles.

That the interior appearance has become strongly American is shown in the following instance related by one of the largest custom-built body builders in New York.

"I was in one of the largest upholstering houses devoted exclusively to automobile fabrics, a day or so ago," he said, "and I saw 'home grown' cloths that excelled any imported materials. Those cloths were used in preference to imported fabrics in many of the cars exhibited at the Palace."

There were many devices for eliminating small noises in the cars shown this year, one being the new gearshift on the Cole. Great attention was also paid to gasoline saving devices, many cars having certain attachments to heat the mixture, and so forth.

The coming season will be bigger and better than ever before—that was the closing word of the show.

PLANS GO THROUGH.

Announcement is made by the managing and reorganization committee for the Maxwell Motor Company, Inc., and the Chalmers Motor Corporation, that the plan of Sept. 1, 1920, for the reorganization and combination of these two properties, has been declared operative. The committee has extended the time under which deposits of stock and unsecured notes and claims can be made without penalty, until February 1.

PURCHASES A CLASSY BOAT.

And Expects to Give Europe a Real Treat.

An Inclosed Car Adapted to Long Journeys.

Special Body Guaranteed to Make Great Hit.

S. O. Johnson, prominent California and Oregon lumber man, is an enthusiastic motorist and loves fine motor cars in the same manner that the Kentucky gentleman of a generation ago loved thoroughbred horses.

It was not strange, therefore, that when he came upon the beautiful inclosed car, built on a Marmon chassis by Rubay and displayed in the San Francisco sales rooms of the Al G. Faulkner Company, that he should find it more to his liking than any car he had ever seen before. Where the average expensive custom-built motor car is designed strictly for town use, its owner not desiring to venture it over the rougher roads of country and mountain districts, this Marmon job is built with the aim of making it primarily a long-distance touring car.

At a moment's notice the interior may be converted from its luxurious arrangement for use in city motoring—with four separately adjustable and thickly upholstered easy chairs—to a bedroom or a dining compartment. The chairs come out, and as fine a bed as the most expensive hotel ever boasted is put in place. Lighting arrangements and interior finish, much of which is in wicker style, are in keeping.

There are three doors to this Marmon "special"—two are on the right side, with the other giving access to the driver's seat forward on the left side. This leaves an exceptionally long window space on the left side of the tonneau, which greatly adds to the attractiveness of the car and to the passenger's enjoyment of the view from within.

Trunk holders are built into the running boards, providing ample carrying space, and numerous other refinements add to the touring possibilities of the car.

Johnson purchased the car and plans to take this Marmon with him to France in a short time and will make an extensive tour of the entire United States on his return from the other side. He states that he chose the Marmon chassis for his custom-built creation, owing to the remarkable roadability of this car and because of its excellent wearing qualities, both of which attributes make it especially satisfactory for the kind of use to which the wealthy lumber man intends to put his car, he believes.

DURANT WILL PUT OUT CAR

Ford Company was thoroughly alive to any emergencies and just as soon as it was found necessary to bring out a new car the company would be ready. This is indicated as admitting that rumors concerning the new car are based on facts.

During 1920 the Ford Company turned out a total of 1,127,677 vehicles of which number approximately 15 per cent, or in round numbers, 154,000 were trucks. In addition there were turned out 69,123 Fordson tractors. These figures, whether for passenger cars, trucks or tractors are considerably over 50 per cent above the production of any other manufacturer in these same lines in the world.

LOTS OF MONEY.

Impressive as these totals are from the production point of view it is the money involved in them, the value of the product, which is making New York and other financial quarters take special notice of the Ford activities. While the Ford Company does not give out figures concerning sales, it is posible, however, to get a fair estimate as to the business of the company from the sales price of its products. Of the 1,027,667 cars made aproximately 722,279 might be listed as sold under the wartime prices and the balance, or 305,398 cars at the new prices.

The old prices range from $525 for the chassis of the passenger car, to $975 for the sedan; the new prices effective since September 21 range from $360 for the chassis to $795 for the sedan. From several Ford dealers it is learned that a fair and nearly correct sales average price for the sales up to September 21 is $575 and for those for the balance of the year, $500. On the basis of these figures the sales value of the Ford cars up to the time of the price reduction was $415,310,425 and the value of those cars made beginning September 21, $152,699,000. Thus the total list price value of the 1920 Fords was $568,009,425, possibly more, but not very likely less.

THE TRACTORS.

As for the tractors, their old sales price was $850; the new price since September, $790. Of the 69,123 tractors made, it is said that 60,000 had been completed before the price reductions. It thus seems reasonable to give the tractors an average sale price of $800, which would mean total sales aggregating $55,298,400, and bring the total value of the manufactured cars and tractors to $623,307,825.

But there still is another important part of the Ford business—that of its parts for its cars and tractors. On this subject nothing very definite has been obtainable, but here again, if the opinion of Ford dealers is anywhere near accurate, it may be said that the Ford parts business during the last twelve months totaled at least $25,000,000. This added to the other sales brings the total of the Ford sales at listed prices up to $648,307,825.

NO NEW CUT.

The first authentic information that the Ford Motor Company is not contemplating another price reduction is found in a letter being sent all Ford dealers.

It says in part: "Inquiries have recently come to us concerning the likelihood of another reduction in the price of our cars. We want to state again that Ford cars are already being sold at a figure actually below cost. For an indefinite period another reduction or change in design is out of the question and not at all contemplated.

"We believe the public will be fair enough to accept the frankness of the above when they consider the extent of our recent price cut. The cut was equivalent to several reductions in one, in our desire to contribute toward satisfying their demands for lower living costs, notwithstanding our sacrifices in marketing our cars at a loss until we are able to materially reduce present costs through lower material prices and greater manufacturing efficiency.

While we have, of course, made some progress in bringing down operation costs we still have a long way to go before any thought can be given to further reductions in present car prices. We have no hesitancy in making these open statements to acquaint you with the true situation."

PAID IN BONDS.

A bonus totaling in excess of $1,000,000 is being paid Dodge Brothers employees in Liberty Bonds. Shop and office employees of five years, or more service with the company are included in the disbursement. Those who have been laid off temporarily, but who have been on the company's payrolls for the allotted five years or more, also are included.

The Studebaker corporation opened this week on a three days' a week schedule. Between 400 and 500 of the old employees resumed work.

The plan is to develop the working force to a normal production basis from now on says James E. Spencer, assistant to the vice-president.

Eight hundred men, or 50 per cent of the normal number of employees are working at the Hupp Motor Company plant, it was said at employment headquarters of the concern. A few more men will be added from day to day.

A denial that the Dodge Brothers plant would reopen after the New York Automobile Show, was issued at employment headquarters.

Buick factories at Flint resumed operations last Tuesday, after a three weeks' shutdown while annual inventory was being taken and changes in equipment made. The factories will operate on a part-time schedule, which was placed in effect before the closing in December.

THE NEW BOSS.

Frederick J. Haynes, vice-president and general manager of the Dodge Brothers Motor Car Company has been elected president of that company and will be the executive in active charge of its operations, according to an official announcement by the board of directors.

At the same time it also was announced that Howard B. Bloomer, for twenty years personal and confidential counsel of the late John F. Dodge and Horace E. Dodge, has been made chairman of the board of directors.

Mr. Haynes, the new president, was born in Cooperstown, N. Y., in 1871. His father was a lawyer. Subsequently the son moved with his parents to Syracuse where he attended the public schools. He was graduated by Cornell University in the mechanical engineering class of 1895.

Then he entered the employ of the Syracuse Cycle Company as draftsman, leaving it to go with the Hunter Arms Company of Fulton, N. Y., as chief draftsman, and from Hunter Arms he went to the E. C. Stearns Company of Toronto, Ont., as general superintendent.

SUPERINTENDENT.

When the Stearns Company merged with several other concerns under the name of the National Cycle and Automobile Company, Mr. Haynes continued as superintendent of the plant at Hamilton, Ont.

When John Dodge quit that plant, Mr. Haynes became general manager and in that capacity ran the plant for a year, then going to the Lake Shore Engine Works at Marquette, Mich., as general superintendent. From 1904 to 1912 he was with the H. H. Franklin Company of Syracuse, N. Y., manufacturers of the Franklin automobile, when he came to Dodge Brothers as factory manager.

He has been with the present firm continuously since that date. Shortly after the death of John F. Dodge, he was made assistant general manager. In May, 1920, he became vice-president and general manager.

FOUR-WHEELED POLICEMEN.

Realizing the important niche which the automobile fills in helping to preserve law and order, the city of Los Angeles has recently purchased a fleet of Dodge Brothers touring cars for use in the police department, thereby following the lead of Detroit and many other large eastern cities who operate upwards of thirty on their various police departments.

"The acquisition of this equipment," said Mr. Sweeney of the Los Angeles police department, "makes the Los Angeles police department one of the most mobile and flexible organizations in the country. For the same reason that the efficiency of an army depends upon its mobility, so the efficiency of a police department depends upon its ability to get to the scene of the crime or trouble in the quickest possible time, and although the automobile functions in many important ways the most important and vital service which it renders is in the police departments of our great cities.

"The true worth of the automobile in the apprehension of lawbreakers is not realized in the ordinary well-ordered existence of our lives, but in periods of great emergency like the San Francisco fire or the Boston police strike. These efficient four-wheeled policemen are called upon to perform every kind of strenuous service from saving would-be suicides to quelling riots, and for this reason it is essential that police machines should be dependable and capable of withstanding extremely rough treatment."

The machines are standard Dodge Brothers' touring cars and are equipped with a penetrating siren which is only allowed on police cars.

TRUCK BUSINESS DUE FOR A BOOM.

FAMOUS PASSENGER CAR MAKERS GET BUSY NOW IN THE COMMERCIAL FIELD.

With factory facilities completed to permit of the manufacture of eighty trucks per day, the Paige company is preparing an agressive truck sales campaign to cover the entire United States, according to John F. Mauro, district representative for the truck division of the Paige factory who was a Los Angeles visitor last week at the headquarters of A. E. Evans & Co.

"During the past, the entire output of Paige trucks has been absorbed in the extreme East and the Middle Western territory," said Mr. Mauro last week. "The increased facilities for manufacture of Paige trucks have permitted the enlargement of the scope of their sales effort on trucks, which will now be extended to the Pacific Coast. Most automotive experts can see a decidedly greater field for expansion in the future in the truck business than even in the automobile passenger car field. The Paige-Detroit company intends to become a very decided factor in the truck field, just as they already are in the passenger car field."

The Day After.

Everett, aged 6, had been left with a neighbor while mamma and papa attended an amateur theatrical.

When they were alone together, the neighbor remarked: "Your mother looked nice. She was certainly dressed up."

"Yes'm," Everett responded, "she had on everything new she got for Christmas 'cepting her percolator."—[Cartoons Magazine.

MORELAND

MADE IN CALIFORNIA U.S.A.

Complete Responsibility

No transaction involving the purchase of a manufactured article is satisfactory without a complete chain of responsibility.

Take the case of a motor truck.

The truck itself must be responsible in design, materials, construction and efficient performance.

The dealer from whom the truck is bought must be responsible, financially, morally and in his knowledge of his business.

Further back is the manufacturer, who probably should have the greatest responsibility of all.

A weakness in any link will develop somewhere in later unsatisfactory service.

Watch out for that weak link.

The Moreland truck has proven its mechanical responsibility and superiority. It is sold by dealers of high standing in their communities, or goes direct through factory operated branches from the producer to the consumer.

Back of it all is the Moreland Motor Truck Co. with a ten-year reputation for stability of character and purpose, for leadership in advanced design, construction, quality and earnest deisre to give true service.

UDDY ROADS ON WAY HERE.

is Hub Deep Part of the Journey.

Englander Tells of His Many Adventures.

storms in Mid West Add to the Pleasure.

of us have lived here so that we've forgotten both the and the climate "back home."

Do you remember how we used to gather round the fireplace and pile on the logs while a blizzard raged outside? When we scratched the ice off the windows and looked out, how we pitied those unfortunates who had to be out of doors, as they went scurrying by in the storm!

VERY DIFFERENT.

Here; without a thought of those old days, we hop into the car in midwinter without even an overcoat, never fearing the weather and glide over boulevards as smooth as a ballroom floor.

But if you found yourself back there in midwinter, remembering the snow and ice, the mud and slush, would you attempt a transcontinental trip to California facing those conditions? Would you go through rain and snow, through slush and mud, hub deep, over mountains and across deserts in even the sturdiest automobile to get back to dear old Southern California?

E. S. Fuller, residing at 843 Townsend street, did all of this and more in his six-cylinder Cleveland.

A REAL VOYAGE.

Leaving Foxboro, Mass., on November 18 with his wife and baby, Mr. Fuller has just completed an ocean-to-ocean tour under most severe weather and road conditions.

He early encountered rains and storms. At Ithaca, N. Y., he was urged not to attempt the trip across the State to the Lincoln Highway connection at Bedford, Pa. Mr. Fuller was not to be turned back, but he found the road about as bad as portrayed. For fifty-four miles he drove through hub-deep mud, sand and gravel, which buffed the paint off his wheels. The depth and clinging nature of the mud compelled him to drive the entire distance in low and intermediate. To his surprise even this strenuous work did not overheat the motor.

SLOPPY ROADS.

Crossing Southern Illinois, rough, rutted roads and deep mud made travel almost impossible. Many other motorists with hearts less stout and cars less sturdy turned back. West of Emporia, Kan., they encountered a blinding snowstorm, which made it very difficult to follow the road. Twice this day the car went into the ditch, nearly overturning, and in both cases the powerful six-cylinder motor pulled them out. It required ten hours to travel sixty miles that day.

Through Arizona and New Mexico were long stretches of road where the car bumped over rocks and boulders until Mr. Fuller felt the frame or axles must give way. But the Cleveland six came through without damage. From Deming west the going was easier.

TELLS ABOUT IT.

On arrival in Los Angeles, Mr. Fuller drove immediately to the W. P. Herbert Company to report the wonderful work of the Cleveland six. Naturally both Mr. Fuller and his wife are delighted. She says, "Next to the baby we value the Cleveland, which brought us back to Sunny Southern California."

THERMOSTAT MUCH APPRECIATED NOW.

CHILLY MORNINGS GIVE OWNERS A CHANCE TO SEE IT DO ITS WORK.

The newspapers give daily evidence of the soundness of the theory of the Columbia radiator shutters, according to J. V. Baldwin of the local Columbia distributing agency which bears his name. Mr. Baldwin does not refer to anything the newspapers carry in the way of stories, but to the number of cars which have carried sheets of newspaper over their radiators on the chilly mornings of the past week.

"Most of the cars which you see carrying newspapers in this fashion have the common thermostatic regulation of the circulation of water through the radiator," said Boldwin last week. "A few cold mornings give unmistakable evidence that this is not sufficient, however. With a flood of cold air being drawn through the radiator," said Baldwin motor, it takes some little time for a motor to reach anything like a proper operating temperature. Control of the air flow, as the Columbia does perfectly and automatically by means of the shutters, is the only solution. The number of $5000 and $6000 cars that you see with torn sheets of paper stuck to their radiators on cold mornings is the best proof in the world of that assertion."

Earl and Pabst Looking 'Em Over in Frigid East.

Harley Earl, chief designer of the Don Lee Coach and Body Works, and Fred W. Pabst, advertising manager for Don Lee interests in California, have been visitors at the New York show this week and spent the next few days at the Cadillac factory in Detroit. Earl attends each New York show for the purpose of studying all new body construction in domestic and foreign cars and for the purpose of placing orders for hardware, upholstery cloth and other equipment used during the year on Don Lee custom-built bodies.

Pabst represented the Cadillac interests at the annual Cadillac meeting and also at the meeting of the Old Guard, which is an organization of all the old-time Cadillac dealers. As Cadillac dealers are seldom changed this means an organization embracing practically every well-known Cadillac dealer in the country. Before returning the Don Lee men will visit many of the best body plants in the East and will also spend considerable time in Detroit, where a great deal of the equipment is manufactured.

BIG BOSS WILL HEAD THIS WAY.

VISITS LOCAL DEALER BUT IS UNWILLING TO LET OUT COMPANY SECRET.

A wire received last week by C. A. Roesch of the Alemite Lubricator Company contained the news that "Dug" Fesler, vice-president and general manager of the Bassick Manufacturing Company, makers of the Alemite system, is on his way to California, and will spend some time with the local Alemite representative. At present Mr. Fesler is in Texas on a hunting trip, but plans to join Roesch here in time to spend a week or more in sight-seeing before they both leave for Chicago to attend the Chicago auto show the latter part of this month.

"I had wired Fesler to try and discover what the mysterious new automobile accessory could be that the Bassick factory promises to spring at the Chicago show, but he did not pay any attention to that part of my telegram," said Roesch last week. "They have certainly kept the new device a complete secret so far, and I am very anxious, indeed, to see it at the Chicago show."

WORKMANSHIP REALLY MAKES THE BATTERY.

QUALITY OF MATERIALS IS ANOTHER FACTOR TO CONSIDER IN BUYING CELL.

"In engineering design, battery manufacturers are pretty much restricted to more or less conventional practices. There are, of course, certain patented features of construction that will give a battery an advantage over its competitors, such as the Titan lock seal, but in the long run the thing that determines its worth is the quality of the material it is made of and the quality of the workmanship that went into it," says H. A. Rose, battery expert of the Western Electric Company, distributors of Titan batteries.

"Take, for instance, two suits of clothes. Why will one give you longer wear and continue to look well long after the other one is worn out and has been discarded? It is simply a case of material and workmanship. Good cloth and superior tailoring are bound to tell in the long run. The same applies to the storage battery. Some storage batteries last almost indefinitely, while others weaken because of inferior materials or careless workmanship.

"There is no mysterious or secret reason for the Titan battery's long life and remarkable overload capacity. Superior engineering and patent construction are only partially responsible—the real reason is found in the quality of the material and workmanship."

HOW FAR WILL A TRUCK RUN.

That's a Question That Has Not Been Answered.

Wonderful Records Piled Up by Commercial Cars.

Half a Million Miles Made by Some of Them.

"Five years from now, this motor truck will be off the roads, hence it must also be off our books."

Thus, arbitrarily, the cost accountant was formerly wont to give any new motor truck which his employer might purchase five years to toil, depreciate and finally disappear, after having returned its original cost, subsequent upkeep and a tidy surplus for profit.

STILL GOING.

So far, so good. But five years later the error in such an inflexible cost system became apparent, for the motor truck, if it was a good truck, refused to retire from active duty despite the fact that, theoretically, its working days were over.

In fact, so many trucks that went into service ten years ago are still working and earning, years after they have written their original cost off the books, that a few cost accountants have chosen to measure truck longevity by miles rather than years. Age yielded to mileage as the unit of measure—and 100,000 miles was considered a liberal allowance for a truck.

GREAT RECORDS.

But once more matters were complicated by the good trucks, for so many of them rounded the 100,000-mile post and kept right on going that the record ceased to excite wonderment. For instance, the White Company of Cleveland in its annual tabulation of letters from owners testifying that they operate White trucks which have exceeded 100,000 miles and are still on the roads, announces that 533 Whites still in service are known to have traveled 100,000 miles; 106 additional Whites have exceeded 150,000 miles; ninety-four are somewhere on the 200,000-to-300,000-mile lap; while twenty-five trucks have forged ahead of the field, well beyond the 300,000-mile mark. The figures in each group are approximately double those revealed by the 1919 tabulation.

In half a hundred lines of business and in all sections of the country these veteran motor trucks have piled up their high mileages. Warriors of the heavy duty type vie with nimble delivery trucks for places of distinction on the honor roll.

HOW'S THIS?

From San Francisco, Charles W. Dixon of the Dixon Transfer and Storage Company writes: "Three of our Whites have gone 275,000 miles each, one 465,000 miles and the other over 500,000 miles. This last truck had done 200,000 miles for the Standard Oil Company before we bought it and for seven years it has been in continuous service for us, running from north to south of California."

One of a quartet of Whites has eclipsed 300,000 miles for the Columbus (O.) Bread Company. A two-ton supply truck has rolled up 313,000 miles for the Humptulips Logging Company of Aberdeen, Wash. The Fuller Dry Cleaning Company of Cleveland, White users for twelve years, have one delivery truck that has rounded out 300,000 miles, two more tied at 240,000 miles and another that has completed 150,000 miles.

WHOLE FLEET.

Numerous instances might be cited of whole fleets of 100,000-mile trucks at work in single installations. In the delivery fleet of Gimbel Bros., New York, are twenty-five Whites that have done 100,000 miles. Twenty-two Whites in the fleet of the Schulze Baking Company of Chicago, Cincinnati, Kansas City and Omaha, are 100,000-milers. Every unit in the original fleet of the Bradford Baking Company of Los Angeles, has gone 100,000 miles. The White Transit Company of Plymouth, Pa., serves the mining region in the vicinity of Wilkes-Barre with a fleet of White trucks, thirteen of which are 100,000-milers, nine having started toward the 300,000-mile post.

One hundred thousand is only a nominal mileage for busses. That mark has been passed by fifteen Whites owned by the Emerick Motor Bus Line Company, Bellefonte, Pa., by ten Whites of the Twin City Motor Bus Company, Chehalis, Wash., by five of the Highway Transit Company's trucks at Canton, O.; five of the Madera-Fresno stages at Madera, Cal., and others.

TEN YEARS OLD.

Officials of the Zanesville (O.) Fruit Company praise the dependability and durability of their ten-year-old White that has rolled up 125,000 miles and is still in service. Two veterans of 1910-11 vintage are still working early and late for W. P. Southworth, Cleveland grocer. In the meat business seven 100,000-milers are enrolled in the Cleveland Provision Company's fleet. The five-ton White purchased by Peter McCabe, building material dealer, was the first heavy duty truck to start working in Albany, N. Y. A few months later, Mr. McCabe added a three-ton White. Today each truck has ticked off more than 100,000 miles.

Two veteran trucks have pulled over 100,000 miles of hilly, coal-mining country for the Steubenville (O.) Coal & Mining Company. All three of the Whites purchased by the Herrmann and Grace Company of Brooklyn, sheet metal contractors, have reached the high mileage class. A few other scattering owners of 100,000-mile Whites, selected at random, are: the Tuolumne Lumber Company of Modesto, Cal.; the Haverty Furniture Company of Atlanta, Ga., and other southern cities; the Eberhardt-Hays Company of Wichita, Kan.; the Henry P. Mayer Music House of Paris, Tex.; Baum's Home of Flowers, Knoxville, Tenn.; the Memphis News-Scimitar.

NEW REPRESENTATIVE IS ON THE JOB HERE.

Announcement has been made by P. W. Wisdon, western salesmanager for the Moon Motor Car Company of St. Louis, of the appointment of Omar Wicklin as head of the sales promotion department for this territory, under the title of western assistant salesmanager. Although a large share of his time will be spent going over the territory, his permanent headquarters will be at 410-17 Washington Building.

NEW TRUCK WILL BE SHOWN HERE.

FAMOUS WAGON MAKING FIRM TO DISTRIBUTE POWER VEHICLES NOW.

C. M. Osterheld of the Stoughton Wagon Company of Stoughton, Wis., is in this city making arrangements for distributing the Stoughton trucks throughout California. These arrangements propose to make Los Angeles the distributing point for the entire State, and the negotiations are practically completed for carrying out this program. On the completion of details contracts will at once be entered into with dealers throughout the State.

The Stoughton Wagon Company is one of the oldest and most firmly established concerns in this country, was organized in 1860, the business having been originally founded for the manufacture of wagons and bobsleds, in which field it enjoyed a reputation for the highest quality products among the 7000 distributors in the United States. Later a motor truck was added to the line and the plant enlarged until it now covers twenty-one acres. The trucks which this company manufacture are from one to three ton capacity.

FAMOUS FLYER INDORSES OIL.

ROGERS ORDERS LOTS OF IT TO BE USED IN AIRPLANES AT HIS FIELD.

Coming from such a pilot and student of gasoline motors as Emory H. Rogers, head of the Rogers Airport, an indorsement of any accessory or fuel is regarded as a most significant tribute.

One of the first things Rogers did upon taking over the great airdome, which is located at Wilshire Boulevard and Crescent avenue, was to get in touch with Ralph Hamlin, the local distributor of this famous Quaker State motor oil, and arrange to have it supplied to him for exclusive use in the motors of his ships. It is a well known fact that an airplane motor subjects an oil to the most severe tests possible and that an oil that can stand up under the terrific motor heat and extraordinary strain of flying under present-day conditions has to be absolutely pure and unadulterated.

HOLLYWOOD SALES BRANCH IS OPENED.

This week opened a new branch salesroom at 6664 Hollywood Boulevard, Hollywood. This new addition makes the sixth branch to be established by the distributors of Leland-built Lincoln motor cars on the Pacific Coast. The Hollywood branch is under the management of W. Hudson and Essex Lead the New Competition

(A Statement by the Hudson Motor Car Company and Essex Motors)

Selective buying again rules the automobile market.

Inability to secure delivery of his first choice no longer forces the buyer to accept a less wanted car.

The return of competition to a basis of merit is welcomed by Hudson and Essex in common with all builders of established reputation.

They have not regarded competition on the basis of ability to deliver as at all a good thing for the motor industry. That situation invited many to plunge into automobile manufacture and exploit the quick profits seizable from unprecedented demand.

A Situation That Was Inevitable

Now once more the task of supplying the motor car demand devolves upon the builders, whose organization, experience and product have proved their fitness to survive through years of competition that recognized none's right to live except by superior merit.

We could not, in candor, urge that Hudson and Essex alone are deserving of consideration to the exclusion of all other cars.

We know there are other thoroughly cars, some even that can well wear the of great cars, and we acknowledge the application and loyalty to ideals which could have produced them.

Yet today, more than 100,000 Hudson Sixes are in service. It is, and has been five years, the largest selling fine car world. Consider if its title to leadership less deserved if the flaw would not appeared in five years.

The Same Men Also Build Essex

And Essex shares this prestige. Not because Hudson builds the Essex, fore pre-pledges to it all the experience knowledge gained in building the Rather because the Essex, not content this endorsement, has established place with such famous records as breaking the transcontinental record four different cars, and in establishing world's 50-hour endurance mark. nearly 50,000 owners also know its worth.

COMPLETE SURVEY OF PROPERTY FROM AIR.

COMPREHENSIVE CHART OF HOLDINGS IS MADE FROM MODERN AIRPLANE.

The first complete survey of a property from the air has just been finished by the Mercury Aviation Company. Instead of blue prints to scale, an aerial photographic survey presents an actual picture of the property as it exists and all parts of the finished photograph show the ground objects in actual scale.

"The aerial survey idea was an outgrowth of the aerial observation in war work. The difference lying in the fact that the perspective was retained in observation work and is entirely eliminated in aerial surveying," says Col. C. B. Worsnop, of the Mercury Aviation Company.

"We have just completed a survey of the Montebello and Richfield oil district for the Union oil company. Every road, every track, every oil derrick, boiler and house is shown clearly. The shadows cast by the objects are the means of determining their heights. Orange groves and truck gardens are shown in detail. No feature is omitted."

LEACH COMPANY IN AMONG TOPNOTCHERS.

SOUND FACTORY POLICY APPRECIATED BY PURCHASERS OF THE AUTOMOBILE.

The report of the State Corporation Commissioner shows that the Leach Biltwell Motor Company ranks second among the motor car manufacturers of the State in its financial condition. The reason for this is attributed to the sound factory policy of the company and the ability of the executives to turn out a motor car that could be marketed at a fair price to earn a reasonable profit.

"The standing of the factory has assisted us materially in the sale of Leach cars in this territory," says E. O. Holly, head of the Holly Motor Sales Company, which represents the Leach in this territory.

"The buyers of cars, especially those in the ultra exclusive class, look farther than the car itself. They want to be assured that the car they are buying will always have 'parents.' Dozens of Leach buyers have been taken through the big factory out on Santa Fé avenue and one look at the hustle and bustle there has been sufficient to convince them that the Leach factory was a permanent institution in the Southwest.

"It is of vital importance to the owner of a car to know these things and with the factory right here at home where they can learn all about it and see for themselves just how the cars are built is an advantage that means much for the future."

Where Ford Parts Go Out Like Hot Cakes.

Parts and accessory department in the new Fahy-Atterbury Building, which was recently completed. Here every possible thing that a Ford owner could desire or use is carried in stock and can be handed out on a moment's notice. Besides putting out Ford parts the Fahy-Atterbury organization can put out the complete article ready for the road.

GLANCING BLOWS ROUGH ON TIRES.

IF NECESSARY TO HIT A ROCK, HIT IT SQUARE ON THE CHIN.

A surprising fact in tire conservation is that it is better to run over a rock in the roadway than to hit it a glancing blow. Of course, such obstacles should be avoided if possible, but when a choice is forced upon the motorist, this decision is best," says A. A. Derry, manager of the Los Angeles Motor Supply House, Inc.

"To hit a rock head-on may cause a severe jolt and, furthermore, is likely to stone bruise the tire, but it causes less damage in the end to the tire properly inflated than a sharp blow against the side wall and rim.

"Side walls, however, are not intended to be shock absorbers, but to give the carcass of the tire the strength and shape. Rubber on the side wall is laid on to protect the tire fabric from the destructive action of the elements.

"The tread of the tire is thick and resilient and made to withstand the abrasive action of the road. A layer of cords, heavily imbedded in cushion rubber, is especially designed to neutralize and distribute the blows. This is the case with the construction of the Samson tire we are distributing."

ACCESSORIES FOR SALE.

By using one entire building for Ford parts and accessories, the Fahy-Atterbury Company, has shown their desire to give the public the very best service under all conditions, which has been their attitude since they were appointed authorized agent of Fords in Los Angeles. This new building is next door to their present location, making it very convenient for those wishing to run in and buy Ford parts and accessories.

This service not only is appreciated by the users of Ford cars, but also garage men and dealers throughout the territory who are constantly in need of parts for making repairs on cars. This new parts department makes an adequate display of all Ford units. A special effort has been made to show in a manner to facilitate buying the different accessories that are used in conjunction with the Ford motor car.

Mr. J. B. Fahy of Fahy-Atterbury Company states that the establishing of this new department is being maintained so that their customers may receive quick and better service. The fact that garage men and dealers can drive their service cars immediately up to the door of this new location and run within a few feet and buy the parts they desire should be appreciated by men who heretofore have been compelled to run upstairs or in back of buildings for the parts department.

Big Difference in Speed Tires and Plain Ones.

"Many people think that racing tires are a criterion by which to judge the value of a tire for road service," says Frank Price, president of Nelson and Price, Inc., "When as a matter of fact there is no parallel between a racing tire and an ordinary tire.

"This dosen't mean that makers of racing tires do not turn out fine quality tires for ordinary owner usage. Racing tires are especially built to stand up under short fast running. They are brittle instead of plastic. They must resist the wear and tear of heat. That is why you see a racing tire fly into bits when it starts to go. It splinters apart and blows out. Rubber for treads on ordinary tires must be tough like leather. To be so it must be pliable and soft.

"Instead of breaking apart, an ordinary tire must wear down slowly. Rocks and road surfaces must be resisted and it take toughness to do it. It is this quality of tread stock that the makers of Hartford tires have sought to develop and their efforts have been successful. Users of these tires are getting anywhere from 15,000 to 30,000 miles depending upon the size car and the use to which it is subjected."

Roads Between States May be Given Aid Now.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

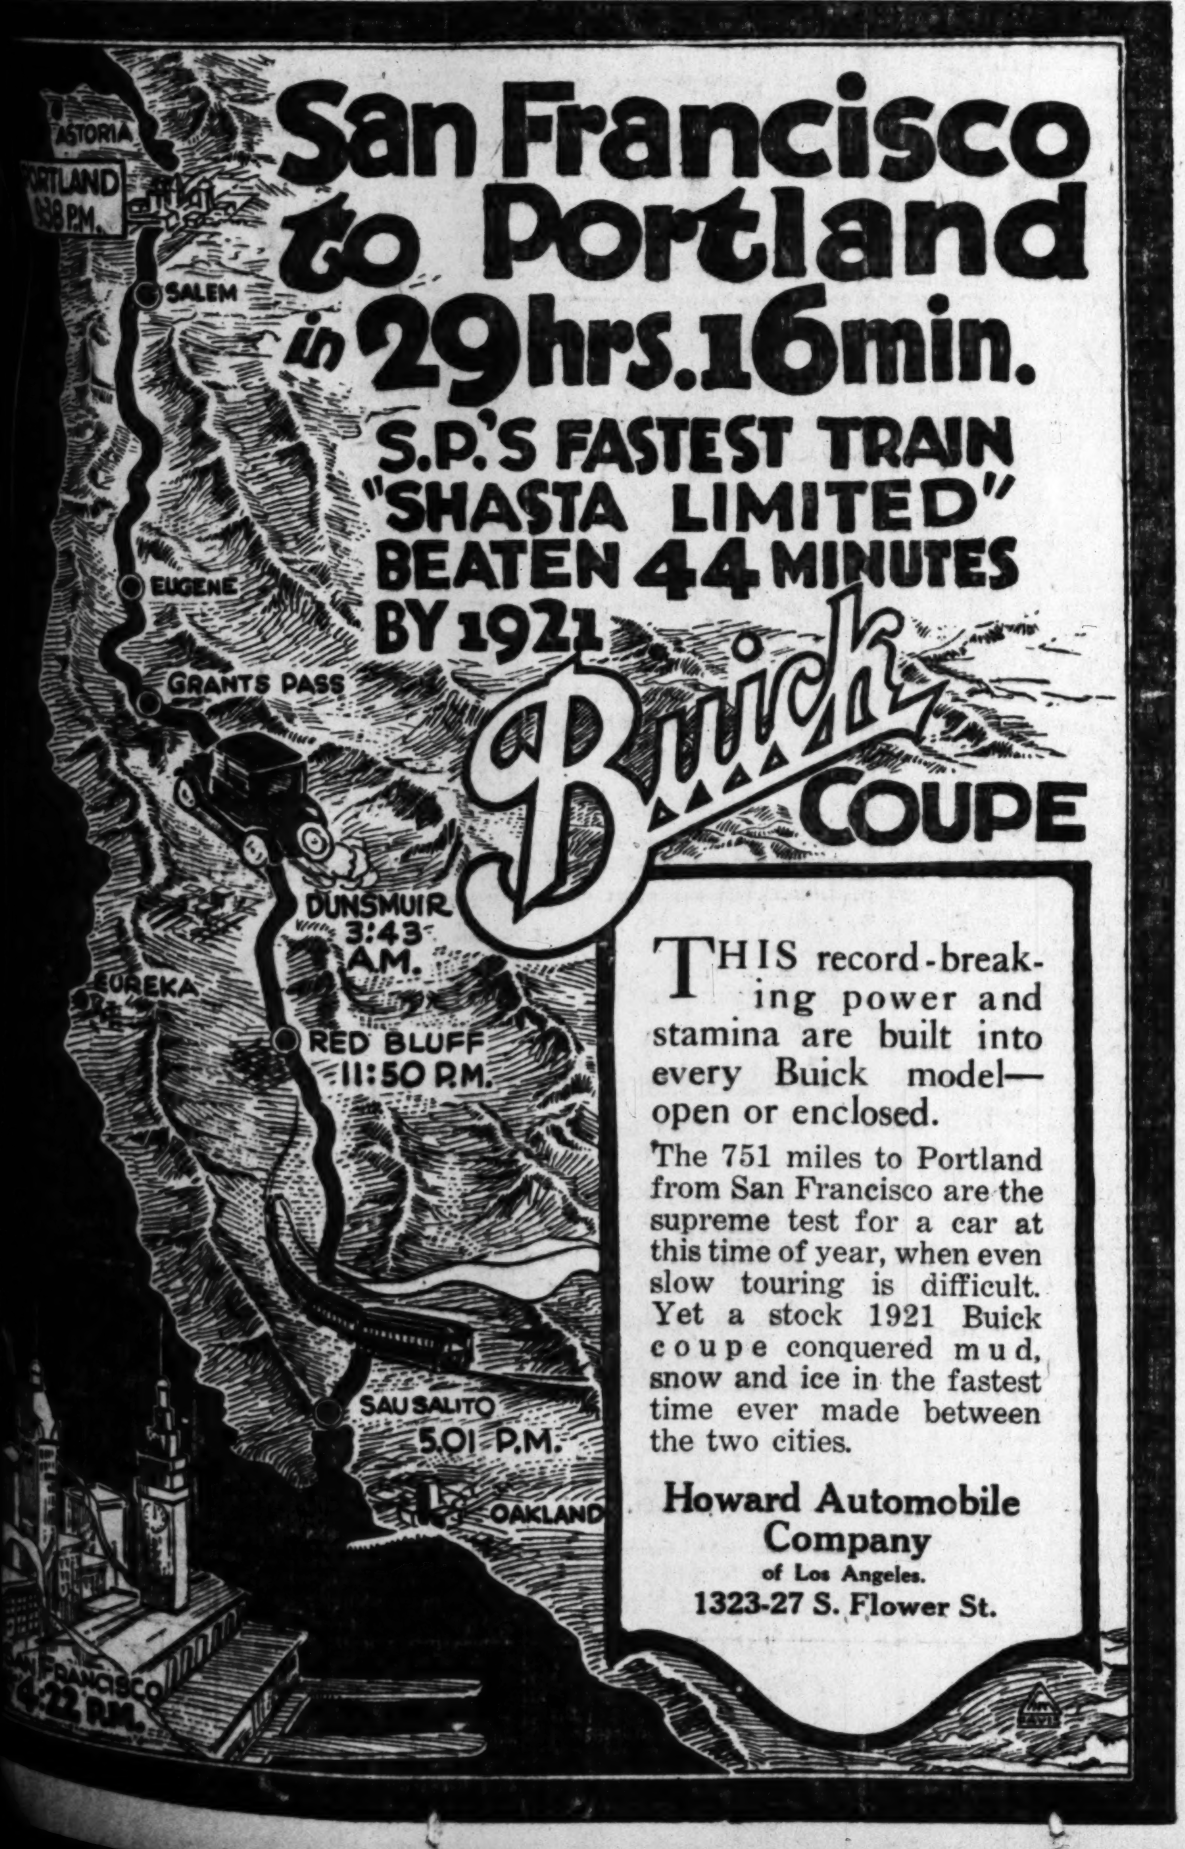
WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—If the present Congress should appropriate any money under the provisions of what is known as the Federal Aid Road Act, the opinion prevails here that the expenditure of the joint Federal and State money would be confined to highways of an interstate character. The House is more likely to favor an appropriation than the Senate, as there is an undoubted demand from Congressional districts in not a few States for more money from the Federal treasury with which to complete road projects already approved.

"While one can appreciate the anxiety on the part of highway officials in certain States to obtain needed money from the Federal treasury," comments Chairman C. Diehl of the A.A.A. good roads board," the plain facts in the case are that any further money from the central source demands national use in its application. Exactly as States first gave aid to counties and then accepted a definite State system of intercountry roads, the next co-operation to the States from the Federal government ought to have a distinct connection with an interstate plan of big highways such as is outlined in the Townsend bill that has the support of farm organizations, business associations and the motor vehicle road users."

SKID CHAIN IDEA USED IN THE WAR.

The marvelous success of the caterpillar type of tractor, as used in the various kinds of "tanks" employed during the great war, was accomplished by nothing more than a development of the familiar skid-chain principle.

For many years expert engineers and inventors had struggled with the difficult mechanical problem of constructing a commercial vehicle that would lay its own track, and thus enable it to secure traction on soft ground, or other yielding and slippery surfaces. But their efforts were unsuccessful until the endless belt principle, such as is used in tire chains, was adopted. Thereafter, the development of the present-day "tank" and other caterpiller tractors was rapid, all of which goes to prove that the skid-chain basic principle is the best giver of traction now known to the automobile world.



San Francisco to Portland in 29 hrs. 16 min.

S.P.'S FASTEST TRAIN "SHASTA LIMITED" BEATEN 44 MINUTES BY 1921 Buick COUPE

THIS record-breaking power and stamina are built into every Buick model—open or enclosed.

The 751 miles to Portland from San Francisco are the supreme test for a car at this time of year, when even slow touring is difficult. Yet a stock 1921 Buick coupe conquered mud, snow and ice in the fastest time ever made between the two cities.

SINGLE MAKE BEST TO GET.

Standardized Fleet Will Do Better Work.

Many Big Firms Find This a Business Truth.

Bus Line Operators Have a Lot of Experience.

Transportation experts and men of big business who have studied the problems of automotive passenger and freight transportation seem agreed on one point, that is a standardized fleet of vehicles.

This is well proven by the members of large fleets of busses and trucks operating in Southern California where all of the vehicles are limited to one make and in some cases to one size.

A notable example of increased efficiency by standardization is that of the Crown Auto Stage Company operating a fleet of fifty or more busses out of Santa Ana. For a time they had a variety of makes of cars and different type bodies, but now they have eliminated practically everything but one chassis and are building a standard type of body for the hauling of passengers in the Orange county district over which they operate.

Most of the busses carry twenty passengers with a few sixteen-passenger bodies left. All of the chassis are the Reo speed wagon, which became standard with them some time ago.

They were influenced in their choice by the exceptional records set up by the first speed wagons they purchased.

The dean of the Reo fleet is credited with over 400,000 miles of operation with hardly an interruption other than a short lay off to have the chassis lengthened to accommodate one of the twenty-passenger bodies. The chassis was over 300,000 miles old at the time it was lengthened to carry a still greater overload than had formerly been imposed on it.

In rebuilding the chassis the springs were replaced with heavier ones, shock absorbers placed front and rear and the frame strengthened with a truss rod.

The Liberty State Line operated between Los Angeles and Downey has fifteen Reos in the same type of service as that of the Crown Stage Line and they have standardized on Reos, having but one truck of another make, which is to be replaced when it has ceased to operate economically.

Motorists Get Well Cooled on Desert Run.

If you would frost your ears these balmy days, get into your motor car and head out for the backside of the Sierra Nevada Mountains up around the source of the water supply of Los Angeles.

Last week a party in an Oakland Six left Los Angeles in the morning to visit the mammoth marble quarries in the neighborhood of Inyo and with the day dawning bright and warm little thought was paid to coats and wraps. From here the road leads out by the way of Saugus and Mint Canyon to Lancaster and Palmdale.

When the high elevation of the desert was encountered a sharp chill was felt and everyone crept down a little in their seats to ward of the icy blasts that seem to come from nowhere but the distance. Where six months ago the radiator boiled and tires blew out from the intense heat, now the motor sputtered and the gas refused to vaporize from the cold.

"All day long we traveled like esquimaux," says E. M. Harrison, who steered the Oakland and its passengers on its "arctic" trip. "I never before felt the cold so much. It was that sharp icicle like cold that went right through you.

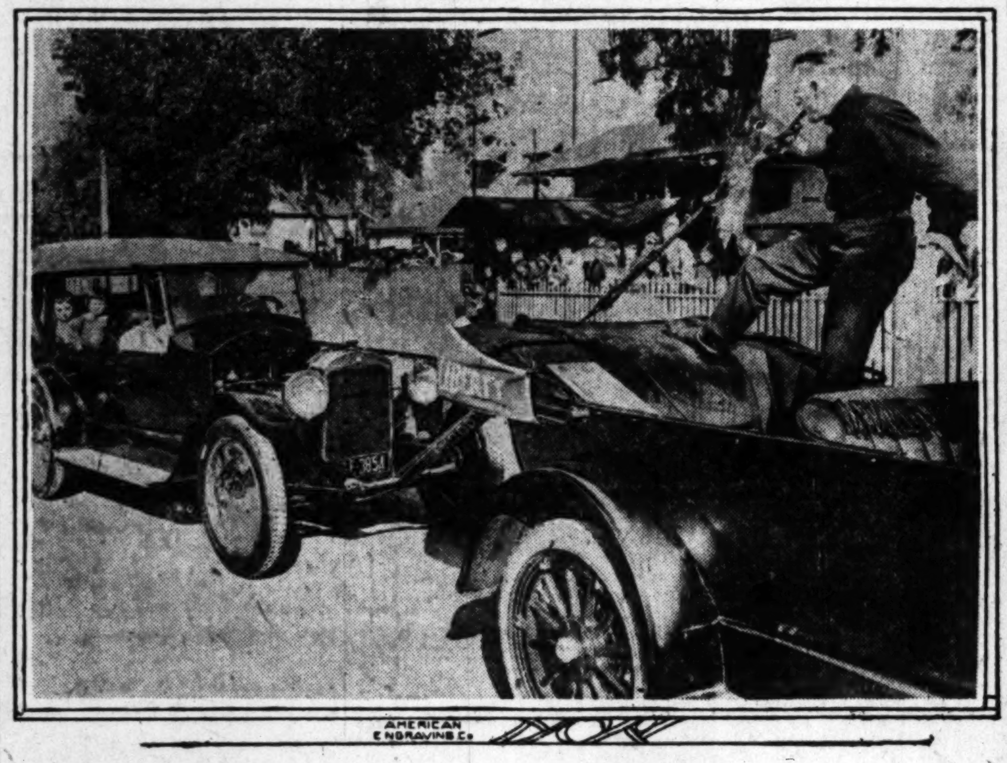
"But after a few good hot cups of coffee at the various little eating places along the route we managed to get to our destination and really appreciate what a hidden gold mine exists at the headwaters of the Owens River."

HELP OWNER GET THE CAR'S VALUE.

DEALER'S INSPECTION DURING FIRST FOUR MONTHS DOES THE WORK.

The first four months or so of ownership of a new car usually determines pretty well the length and quality of service which the motor car will give. This is not so much due to the fact that the car may suffer undue wear in that short period, but because in that time the owner has formed either good or bad habits in the matter of taking care of the car. If he is careless during that period, when the car is new, it is a safe bet that he will be increasingly careless as the months go by and the car becomes less and less new in appearance and in fact.

"It is exactly for that reason that we lay such stress on our system of regular monthly inspection during the first four months that our Haynes cars are in the hands of their new users," says D. Gerard Chessman of Chessman & Co., Haynes distributors for Southern California. "No automobile, regardless of its construction, can give its best service without proper care in the matter of regular lubrication and occasional minor adjustments. For the first four months that Haynes cars are in service, we give regular inspections and lubrication. The owner is advised by mail about a week before each inspection time, so that he can make his plans accordingly. The only charge made for this service is for the actual cost of the grease and oil used."



AMERICAN ENGRAVING Co

Gee Whiz—Suppose He Should Have to Sneeze.

According to C. W. McKelvey the stunt pulled by Cameroni, the strong man, in a recent parade isn't such a wonderful thing after all because a Liberty Six is noted for the ease with which it rolls along the highway.

TOWS A CAR WITH HIS TEETH.

One of the most striking features of the film stars' parade of last week was the feat of Cameroni, the strong man, who, standing in the tonneau of one Liberty six, towed another one by means of a rope held in his teeth. C. W. McKelvey, Liberty six distributor, claims that the sight of a Liberty six being towed under any circumstances is a sufficiently rare occurrence to create a great amount of interest, but at any rate the performance of an iron-jawed gentleman in hauling a car for two miles through the traffic by his teeth was enough to make a bull dog turn green with envy. Just what would have happened if Cameroni had been seized with an uncontrollable impulse to sneeze during the parade it is impossible to say, but no such disaster marred the course of proceedings.

The Liberty six which Cameroni pulled was equipped with Hood cords, this being the only stipulation that the strong man insisted upon, as he declared the car rolled easier on this tire equipment than upon any other make he tried out during his experimenting prior to the test. A Hood inner tube served as a portion of the tow line, its elasticity greatly aiding in the conservation of the strain upon Cameroni's molars, biscuspids and other dental equipment in the frequent starts from a dead stop, which resulted from the many delays in the progress of the parade through traffic.

While McKelvey is not figuring upon adding the stunt as a regular feature of his Liberty six demonstrations, he nevertheless declares that it ought to be considered as good evidence of the fact that a Liberty six rolls along without any undue amount of friction.

REORGANIZATION PLAN IS WORKING.

NEW SCHEME GIVES CONCERN A BIG ADDITION TO ITS WORKING CAPITAL.

The reorganization plan of the Maxwell-Chalmers organization that has been under way since last summer, was declared in complete operation last Tuesday, January 11, according to telegraphic advice received by the Greer-Robbins Company, Chalmers distributors, from A. E. Barker, sales manager of the corporation.

"The reorganization plan went through in its original form and with its consummation, fifteen million of added capital will afford great activity to every department," declared P. H. Greer, in discussing the important news. "Under the leadership of W. P. Chrysler, who heads the organization, and who is recognized as one of the greatest men in the automotive industry, the high standard of the Chalmers is to be maintained in every detail. His public announcement to this effect was published some time ago Mr. Chrysler is a remarkable executive and he is identified with big things in the industry."

LIGHT RACING CAR MAKES REAL SPEED.

LOCAL CARBURETOR HELPS THE OLD GIRL RAMBLE TO NEW RECORDS.

The Rajo-equipped Ford racing car, owned by the Rajo Motor Company of Racine, Wis., which created considerable of a sensation in Wisconsin and middle western tracks last summer, is equipped with a Master carburetor, is the latest information given out by L. A. Hardie, secretary and treasurer of the Master Carburetor Company. The Master equipment was decided upon after a series of highly satisfactory tests.

"The Rajo-equipped Ford has been proclaimed the lightweight champion. On many occasions it has turned a mile on a one-mile track (circular) in less than fifty seconds. Every time it has been clocked by three or four stop watches. We do not use alarm clocks for this purpose as some of them do," writes the manager of the Rajo Motor Company.

RENEWED SALES INTEREST SHOWN.

CUT IN PRICE INDUCES MANY TO DROP IN AND LOOK OVER MACHINES.

As evidence that the public is exhibiting renewed interest in the automobile market, Stanley W. Smith of Smith Brothers, distributors of Peerless eight cars for Southern California, points to the large number of interested visitors that have appeared at their salesroom since the Peerless price reduction was announced, a little more than two weeks ago.

"Unquestionably, the price reduction that we announced on all models recently has induced many to visit our salesroom, as well as those of our Southern California dealers," stated Smith. "However, each of our salesmen and practically every one of our dealers tells us that there is an increased buying interest noticeable aside from this influence. It would seem that the so-called buying strike is at an end, or nearly so. Reports that we have received from the East indicate that such is the case."

Expansion Plan for Taxis Will be Considered.

Elaborate plans for expansion and extension of activities of the Yellow Taxicab Company are to be taken up at the annual meeting of the stockholders to be held on the coming Tuesday. At that time a new board of directors will be elected, from which officers will be chosen for the ensuing year. At present Irwin J. SAXON

Duplex engineering

—makes poor gasoline a perfect fuel

There is power locked up in every particle of gasoline, but to get it all out the gas must be completely vaporized. Much of the low-grade gasoline sold today escapes the conventional carburetor unvaporized and enters the motor in a liquid state—useless for power and productive of carbon.

Duplex Manifold —another Saxon advantage

Saxon

Saxon finds the complete answer to this problem in double carburetion. Not once but twice is each particle subjected to a thorough process of carburetion. Saxon's patented Duplex Manifold catches every drop of raw gas which escapes the carburetor and holds it until it is completely vaporized.

Double carburetion wrings every ounce of power from any grade of gasoline, and reduces the tendency toward carbon—a two-fold achievement of Duplex Engineering (for Duplex means double).

These and many other patented developments make "Duplex" the only word which accurately describes the Saxon of today. When you see these features in our showroom and hear them explained you will realize why Saxon is at least two years ahead of present standards.

Upon request we will gladly send you "Brass Tacks," an interesting and informative booklet containing the story of Duplex Engineering

"The electric car costs very much less to operate that the gasoline car, and therefore it is used for all light and heavy hauling in a radius where the mileage will permit it to go.

"We estimate the cost of the electric cars per day, regardless of mileage, including depreciation, insurance, license, etc., as a trifle more than one-half that of gasoline.

United Cigar Stores Company of America
New York, N. Y.

"Actual records, which we have kept for a number of years, show that the electric for our work is operated about 35% cheaper than gas, both accomplishing the same deliveries. At the present time we are operating only two gas trucks, both of which will be replaced with electrics after they have worn out."

"The upkeep of the electric has, in our experience, been much more economical than that of the gasoline truck, in fact, ten of the electrics cost less for operating expenses than four gasoline trucks."

Blue Valley Creamery Company,
New York, N. Y.

"We are now using in New York City eighteen Walker Electric Trucks, and a good number at other plants. They have given us excellent service. This work cannot be done by gas trucks as quickly. SLIGHTLY DRIVEN ARMY MACHINES OFFERED AT LOW PRICES TO PURCHASERS.

An interesting sale of slightly used trucks is being held at the Wilmington Garage, Wilmington, Cal., and will continue until all are sold. There are seventy-five of these three and one half ton standard Packard and Riker (formerly known as the Locomobile) army models. D. F. Poyer & Son, Transport truck distributors in Southern California, are the sales agents.

The speedometers show mileages of from 300 to 5000 miles; in fact, just enough travel to break in these sturdy machines and an indication that they have seen but little service. They were all completely overhauled in English shops before being shipped and have been thoroughly inspected by the Poyer mechanics who proclaim them to be in A-1 shape.

These trucks are equipped with regulation wooden and steel army bodies and the tires are all practically new. They are priced according to the mileage shown on the odometer and at approximately half the list. A discount will be allowed for cash, or easy payments may be arranged for if necessary.

NEW MANAGER IS "GO GETTEM" GUY.

While awaiting completion of new headquarters at Eighth and Merchant streets, the management of Guasti, House & Giulii, Inc., Kelly Springfield and Perfection tire distributors, is devoting itself to an expansion program and the perfecting of its service organization.

The distributing firm started out the new year with a new sales manager, L. D. Torrey, known throughout the tire trade of the Pacific Coast as a regular "go-getter." Until recently he was in a managerial capacity with the distributors of Kelly Springfield tires in San Diego county.

Why the Hupmobile is the Car You Should Buy

The Hupmobile stands today as one of the few great cars whose reputation for mechanical superiority is unquestioned.

Unquestioned by its owners, as they know its unfailing ability to do all and more than any other car. They know its power, its speed and its ease of operation. They know its wonderful economy, although not realizing how so small a motor can show such superior road service on twenty miles and more to the gallon of gasoline. They know how much better every part is made than cheaper competing cars supply. They know the value of the superior workmanship and material. They know a ready market awaits every used Hupmobile at a higher price compared with first cost than any other car on the American market.

They know that Hupmobile miles cost less than any other, and every one a Comfort Mile.

Hupmobile Superiority is Unquestioned by Owners of All Other Cars

They know from friends and users of its excelling qualities, and it is hard indeed to find even a "prejudiced owner" of other makes who will not say: "The Hupmobile is a mighty good car".

Every mechanic schooled in automobiles will admit that the Hupmobile is a superior piece of mechanism. He knows of its simplicity and knows that no car of any price uses better material or finer workmanship. He knows of its most perfect oiling system, its easy starting qualities, its excellent carburetion, and admires it for the perfect adjustment of all parts. Surely it is hard to find a car so universally liked by all who know it and whose superiority is so unquestioned.

The Car That Stands Up

The reasons E. S. Fuller of Foxboro, Mass., drives a Cleveland Six are "Reasons Why" there are nine hundred more-than-satisfied Cleveland owners in California. The reasons will interest you.

Mr. Fuller left Boston for Los Angeles November 18. Immediately its punishment began.

In Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Kansas slippery, clinging knee-deep mud in the roads caused hours of continous low-gear work. (Twice the Cleveland Six pulled out of the ditch with its own power.)

In New Mexico and Arizona he drove a hundred miles of sand, rocks and boulders which it seemed no machine could survive.

The Cleveland Six stood the strain. Through all conditions the six-cylinder Cleveland motor carried on, never missing, never overheating, never failing.

Mr Fuller says: "The Cleveland came through without a dollar's repair expense. As Mrs. Fuller states, 'Next to our baby, we value the Cleveland.'"

In the Cleveland Six, on California roads you'll get far more of this unfailing satisfactory performance, with reserve power and strength for all energies.

Visit our beautiful display rooms, where a courteous floor man will show you the car. Ride in one; drive it yourself. Phone now for demonstration.

Mr. Automobile Buyer:

Why do hammers have wooden handles?

Simply because a hammer with a metal handle would be unendurable to work with. The wooden handle is a shock-absorber that prevents the vibration and impact of the blow of the hammer head on nail or anvil from being transmitted to the hand of the user.

For the selfsame reason, Franklin employs a wooden chassis frame. The shocks of the road are absorbed in the frame instead of being transmitted to the passengers. As a consequence, Franklin riding qualities are very different indeed from those of a car with metal frame. It is a difference increasingly apparent the longer the ride you take.

As for strength, no Franklin frame has ever broken, to our knowledge, save through the result of collision. We doubt if any other car has such a record. The three-ply laminated frame of second-growth ash which Franklin uses is stronger than an equivalent weight of high-grade steel. That is the reason that wood is the predominant material in airplane construction today.

An all-day ride in a Franklin does not tire you as it does in most cars. The wooden frame is one of the chief reasons. It's a Franklin superiority you will not find in any other car.

Queen's medal from her own hand. The All-American team of wing-shots were victors over the United Kingdom team in all-international races, shot in London, Eng., winning the first three in a series of five events. Our last night in London had been reserved for an All-American banquet given the team by Paul North and wife of Cleveland, O.

We were scheduled to leave the following morning over the East Coast Route for Edinburg, Scotland, an eight-hour run. We were met at the Royal Hotel, Edinburg, by a delegation from the Scotch team, who started us out on a sight-seeing trip around historic old Edinburg. The monument of Sir Walter Scott, an old castle surrounded by an obsolete moat, savoring of ye old and troublesome times of the clans; tenement houses, ten stories high without elevator service; Salisburg Crags 500 feet above sea level, were all recognized points of interest.

A special tally-ho called for us the following morning and we crossed the Firth of Forth bridge en route to the Trossach District. Not a detail for our convenience or comfort had been overlooked by our Scotch friends, who belied the prevalent accusation for intense conservation. They put their money in promiscuous circulation and showed us a fine time. The highlands we toured by special tally-ho; the lakes in boats, which at all points waited our coming. We were traversing a historic section, and visiting lakes made famous by the pens of Bobbie Burns, and Sir Walter Scott in his "Lady of the Lake." In crossing Loch Katrine, its heralded beauty was verified. Near the middle of Lake Ellens (Shaggy) Island was passed. The grave of Rob Roy at Balquhidder was pointed out to us. Loch Lomond was most beautiful. Every turn of the road and rambling streams were replete with historic events. We passed through many villages. Bag-pipers were playing their weird, entrancing music; the populace were in holiday attire and followed our coach. They were out to see the American team, being very much interested in the coming race.

The best shot on the Scotch team, with wonderful local reputation, resided in Aberfoyle, a Trossach town nestling at the foot of Craigmore Highlands, where we lunched that day. The people, drawn by curiosity, were out to see the Americans who had so easily defeated the British. We drove to the Bailie Nicol Jarvis Hotel, where the bag-pipers took a new lease on life and lustily pumped on those wind instruments of torture. This gave us an opportunity to give the assembled crowd the once over. An old typical Scotchman, in his MacGregor plaid, cap, kiltie, bare legs, Galway whiskers and plaid stockings, was looking us over. His make-up appealed to me, inviting an interview if opportunity presented.

After registering the team, I turned to face my prospective friend. "You have a nice little city," I said. "We are very proud of it," was his reply. "They tell me you are captain of the American team. Would you do me the honor of drinking a Scotch and soda with me?" To refuse might give offense. I followed to the taproom, where a barmaid supplied "the makings." After a couple of shots he became confidential, explaining to me the accuracy and ability of the Scotch team, as they had been selected from all over Scotland. In return, I advised him "we had made selections from San Francisco to New York and covered some ground." My declaration that we would win the race induced a combination look of semidisgust and sympathy. Before leaving, I fitted him out with complimentary tickets for himself and family, as he asserted every person was coming down to see the race.

The day we shot in Glasgow, I located and brought my Scotch friend inside the inner gate, giving him a ringside seat, much to his delight. Following our winning race, we all adjourned to the clubhouse, accompanied by my Scotch friend. Seated at the table, I asked him his opinion of the American team. "My God, mon, they are revelations. We never expected to see shooting like this." Our ten men missed but thirty-one targets in a possible 1000. Tears coursed down his cheeks—he was heartbroken, but game to the finish. We were having a little "farewell." On the old man's breast I noticed an attractive medal and made inquiry of its significance. His chest swelling with pride, he advised me he was a member of the Queen's Highlanders. Queen Victoria at her last jubilee had presented every member of her Scottish Guard a souvenir medal from her own hand. One side shows the Queen as first crowned, when a girl; on the reverse side, as she appeared at her last jubilee. "I am going to give you this medal, mon." I made a feeble objection, but he forced the medal into my possession, stating, he might never see me again, but he would never forget me.

My next article in this paper will describe the race with the Scotch team.

Question: Do fish suffer when hooked and taken from the water? Do they feel pain?

AARON NEVIN.

Pittsburg, Pa.

Answer: A difficult query to answer. We do know that Illinois suckers put up an awful howl when pried loose from their possessions, indicating great suffering, at least mentally. The brain of a fish does not indicate high mentality. They are satisfied to feed and breed. There are no nerves in the bony or cartilagenous structure encircling their mouths, hence, the setting of a hook, does not give pain, but instinct encourages their fight and effort to escape. Fish suffer most when taken from water and permitted to die in the air. They should be dispatched as soon as possible. In my judgment it is possible for fish to suffer pain.

Q.: Who holds the record for the longest consecutive run on inanimate targets at the present time? Who in your judgment is the best all-round shot in the world?

ROLAND McGREGOR.

Los Angeles, Cal.

A.: The longest continuous run was made by Fred Gilbert of Spirit Lake, Iowa, who in 1919 broke 569 without a miss, a record which will stand for many years hence, in my judgment. When you ask who is the best all-round shot in the world, you are covering considerable territory and treading on a field where angels would absolutely fear to venture. There are so many first-class scatter-gun artists who are divided for high average by a fraction of 1 per cent. that a ten-target event might decide the winner for the year. In the interest of peace and harmony, I decline to pick a winner and refer you to the book of general annual averages, according you the right to make your own selections. There are legions of shooters who are always possibilities.

SALESMEN GET EYE FULL.

Instead of their customary Monday morning sales session, the entire sales force of the local J. W. Leavitt organization drove to Cahuenga Pass this week and with nine in the car the Oldsmobile four topped the grade at thirty miles an hour. The performance of the car with ten passengers the week before had been so convincing to the Hollywood sales force of A. S. French that Clair R. Savage, sales manager for the local Oldsmobile distributors, wanted his entire sales crew to have the chance to see the stunt performed.

After the car had climbed Cahuenga with its big load, seven of the passengers got out and watched the Oldsmobile, with two passengers climb the steep road to the Boy Scouts' camp on high gear. This road branches to the left just a short distance below the summit of Cahuenga as it is approached from the south. While it is not a road that many motorists use, it is one which thousands have seen as they drive up Cahuenga, and it certainly has none of the appearances of a high-gear road. It is rather rough as it branches from Cahuenga, and the Oldsmobile started up it at a moderate twenty-five-mile an hour speed, and negotiated the steepest part of the pull at a twelve to fifteen-mile an hour gait. According to salesmen familiar with the hill, only two high-priced, powerful cars claim to have climbed it in high gear prior to the Oldsmobile four's accomplishment. It is certain that it will never be a popular road as a high-gear demonstration.

"The ability of the Oldsmobile four motor to deliver a high-power output after the car speed has been pulled down to a twelve or fifteen-mile pace is one of its qualities that is most appreciated by motorists," said Savage last week. "In mountain driving it is especially appreciated. Many high-speed motors are very powerful as long as they are turning over rapidly, but have small power output at slow car speeds. Such cars are not pleasant to drive on the average mountain road where it is impossible to travel fast, for it necessitates the frequent use of second or low speed."

CAPTIVE BALLOON ONCE HAD CLUTCH.

BUT MAGNETIC TRANSMISSION TOOK ITS PLACE IN GREAT WAR.

An interesting story of how the entire output of Owen-Magnetic transmissions was drafted for service with the air forces of the Allies during the latter period of the war was told last week by J. W. Gaffney of the Gaffney Motor Sales Company, local Owen distributors.

"The captive observation balloons used to direct artillery fire and were pulled to earth by means of gasoline motors mounted on trucks, and geared to a winch," said Gaffney last week. "A clutch was, of course, necessary, between the motor and winch, and these were a source of serious trouble, frequently causing loss of the balloons and observers because sudden gusts of wind would impose such terrific strain upon the clutch that it would burn out, the winch unwind suddenly and the balloon break loose. The air service engineers finally hit upon the idea of using the Owen Magnetic transmission between the motor and winch. This not only gave far greater flexibility in controlling the balloon, but by eliminating the clutch entirely put an end to a source of serious danger to the airmen."

HOW FAR CAN THAT AUTOMOBILE COAST?

HERE'S A CHANCE TO SEE HOW EASILY YOUR CAR CAN COVER MILES.

It's a very good idea to try out the coasting ability of your car once in a while, according to the advice offered by Clifford Mutchler, sales manager of the Standard Steel Automotive Corporation.

"Coasting down some hill where you know what your car ought to do is a good way to detect any undue friction in the operation of your car," said Mutchler last week. "If you find the car will not coast as freely or as far as it should you can look for a dragging brake, worn or broken wheel bearings or other common causes of unnecessary friction and hard running.

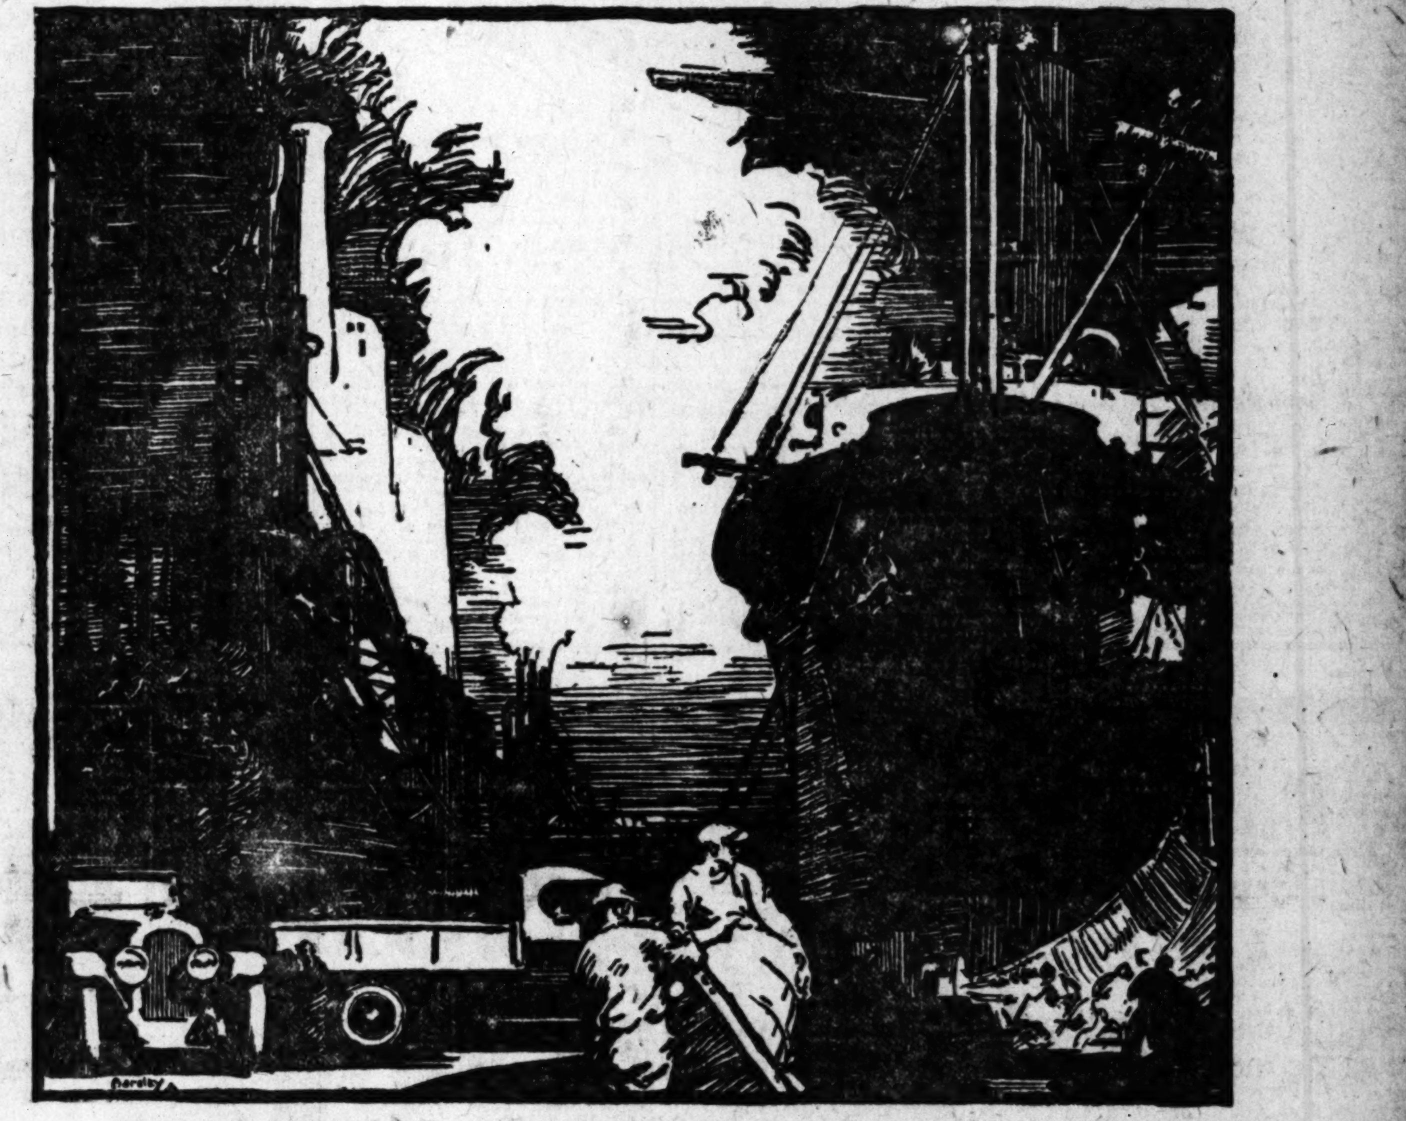
FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF GOODRICH



The widening of transportation by rail and water, by automobile and motor truck, the development of the use of electricity, the growth of the industrial world—all these have called upon the full resources of the rubber industry until rubber in its manifold uses is an essential part of countless factors entering into our daily lives.

THE TRIUMPH OF RUBBER

SINCE the founding of the company in 1870 Goodrich has taken an active and prominent part in the upbuilding of the rubber industry. It has produced and is producing a host of things which effect a saving of time, labor and materials for other industries.

Hundreds of thousands of people may think of Goodrich principally in terms of tires—yet tires are simply one division of the work of the organization. Some others are mechanical rubber goods, rubber footwear, druggists' rubber sundries and hard rubber products.

The growth of Goodrich is indicated by the fact that from the original output of fire hose and mechanical goods the list of Goodrich wares has increased until now more than thirty thousand different articles are being manufactured and distributed throughout the world.

The progress of the company from the beginning has been markedly influenced by the firm belief of every member of the institution in its plans, purposes and products. Harmony of effort, intelligent work, confidence in the company and in one another—these influences have combined to build Goodrich to its present great proportions.

The rounding out of its first half century finds the organization full of youth and determination, alive to the promises of the future and strengthened by the good will and good faith of customers whose patronage has been earned and held through merit.

AN INTERESTING BOOKLET—Few persons realize the interesting side—even the romance—of the rubber industry and its history. We have published a booklet commemorating our fiftieth anniversary. It tells the story of rubber. This book, "The Golden Year of Goodrich," will be sent in response to a request on your business stationery.

BROTHER—THERE'S CLASS HERE.

One of the most luxurious and equipped cars that is negotiating the traffic of this city in the adjoining suburbs is a MacFarlan sport car owned by Dr. Carlos de Mandil, violinist and leader of the symphonists at the Mission Theater.

The car itself is very striking and is the sportiest model that the MacFarlan factory produces with added equipment; special windshields, small unit spotlights and the beautiful California top.

The most noticeable thing about this car when on the streets is the fact that it has two uniform men to operate this vehicle; one serves as a driver and the other as a footman. Dr. Mandil has not skimped in making this car one of the most convenient as well as practicable from every angle. The fact that he has both a chauffeur and footman, shows his desire to have a car that will facilitate his getting about in the very best fashion.

This is not the only MacFarlan owned by a musician at the Mission Theater because C Sharp Minor has also a MacFarlan roadster which he prizes very highly. Both of these cars being sold by Lewis-Hilliard Company, distributor of the MacFarlan cars in this territory.

ARCHITECT TAKES CHOICE.

One of the show sales reported by the Boulevard Motors Corporation, Templar distributors for Southern California and Arizona, was that of a special sport four-passenger job to John Parkinson, the well-known Los Angeles architect, according to Leland S. Foulke, president of the concern. Parkinson consented that the car remain in the Templar exhibit until the close of the show. Delivery was made to him last Monday.

"Mr. Parkinson, who is a keen motorist, and who has plenty of mechanical knowledge, bought his sport Templar, only after giving plenty of consideration to several makes, so he informed us," declared Foulke. "It was a long demonstration drive, while on a business trip to the central part of the State, that showed him the unusual power of the Templar motor as well as the wonderful riding qualities of the car. The way it clung to the road when traveling at the highest speeds and when going over the roughest roads was a revelation to him, considering the car's size, he has informed us."

Parkinson, he explained, wanted a car that not only showed class, but that could be easily handled in dense city traffic and that would also get out on the road and cover distance in the shortest possible time commensuate with existing traffic regulations. The job is painted dark red, with black fenders, white wire wheels and carrying two extras, one on each side. A special trunk rack with nickel protection strips on the back of the tonneau, materially adds to its distinctive appearance.

New Salesrooms Make Possible Velie Display.

Clear indication of the tremendous growth in popularity of the Velie six is to be seen in the moves made by the Lord Motor Car Company into two new salesrooms, which give more than four times greater floor space than their former location, and will afford Velie buyers and owners far better facilities for transactions that have to do with the Velie car.

Two weeks ago this company moved their entire used car department to a commodious location at Tenth and Olive streets. Monday they held open house at the corner of Grand avenue and Pico street, in a handsome and newly-finished salesroom, from which all business in new Velies is to be handled in the future.

The new Velie home doubles the space for Velie cars, provides additional office space and has a large and unusually well fitted service department, where repair work on Velie cars can be handled with greatly increased speed and efficiency.

AMERICAN ENGRAVING Co.

High Cost of Gasoline Doesn't Worry This Party at All.

When he can get out and roll away with better than twenty miles to the gallon in his Apperson, William Bispham doesn't give a whoop what they do with the price of gas.

ENGINEERS GET SERVICE.

It is a matter of comment among experienced automobile men that railroad engineers are a class of motorists who never fail to get unusual service from their cars. Probably the fact that they are thoroughly familiar with the importance of proper care of their locomotives accounts for it in a large degree, because they as a consequence give more attention to the care of their cars than does the ordinary motorist. And, whatever their fondness may be for speed on a god piece of road, it is not to be doubted that they "stop, look and listen" at the railway crossings.

A good example of the unusual service which engineer-drivers obtain was afforded by the experience of William Bispham, Santa Fe engineer of Mojave, who stopped at the local Apperson factory branch last week to relate his experience with his Apperson eight, which he has been driving for several months.

"It is 107 miles from Mojave to Los Angeles by the route I follow" Bispham told Harris Hamshue, last week. "I cover this distance, when traveling from Mojave to Los Angeles on just five gallons of gasoline. For a powerful eight-cylinder like the Apperson, I think an average of better than twenty-one miles per gallon is remarkable.

"Much of the distance is downhill, it is true, and while I burn six and a half to seven gallons of gasoline on the return trip, nevertheless I am securing an average gasoline mileage from the Apperson considerably in excess of what I expected when I bought the eight. I do not make any especial effort to conserve gasoline, but I keep the car in good condition and drive at moderate speeds."

Changed His Mind.

Jack: Then you didn't ask for her hand?

Tom: No; when I went to interview her father he was busy with the furnace. He called out to me to come down and, after watching his struggles for half an hour and hearing what he said about coal, I decided not to get married.—[Boston Transcript.

Billy Martin Sets a Record in Used Cars.

Large gobs of automobile salesmen have dashed out and set up records for sales of new cars, but it remains for Billy Martin, used car manager of the Paul G. Hoffman Company, local Studebaker distributors, to burst into the limelight with a record for sales in second-hand automobiles.

When the total of used car sales was figured up by the Hoffman organization, last week it was found that Billy Martin had delivered approximately $1,200,000 worth of this type vehicle during the past eighteen months. Billy is herewith handed the nonskid waffleiron as well as the cut glass egg beater.

Not only does Mr. Martin have to keep the used cars streaming out of the Studebaker headquarters just as fast as they are taken in, but he has to glance over each buss before it is accepted and name the price it is worth. Consequently, here is one gentleman who keeps a pretty accurate hand on the throbbing pulse of the used car market. Also Mr. Martin has been handling more or less used motor cars ever since the first flivver ran far enough to be called second-hand.

"The used car situation is a rather peculiar one at present," says Mr. Martin. "Prices are far below the normal standard and far below where they should be or will long remain. As a result there is no time like the present for a man who is thinking of snapping up a slightly used job to get busy and snap. Values are starting the return to normal and the present situation will not last for any appreciable length of time."

Leads League in Putting Out Used Cars.

Billy Martin, used-car boss of the Paul G. Hoffman Company, local Studebaker distributors, certainly makes the second-hand automobiles sit up and eat out of his hand. He has delivered more than a million dollars' worth of these vehicles during the past eighteen months and continues to hang up new records every time he thinks about it.

EQUIPMENT WORTH MORE THAN AUTO.

Cases where a man will invest a greater sum in an accessory for his car than the value of the car itself are decidedly rare, but such an instance was reported last week by Douglas Wilson, of Wilson Brothers, Southern California distributors for the Westinghouse air spring. "A man came in one day last week and asked us if the air springs could be transferred from one car to another. We assured him that it could be done easily. He went away and next day came in with a six-year-old car whose value in the second-hand market I know would not have been in excess of the cost of the air springs. He said that he knew the car was not much for looks, but that he was satisfied with everything about it but its riding qualities, and that he intended to put on the air springs and use it for a couple of years more."

PUBLICATIONS IN THE REALM OF CHECKERS.

By John Dougherty.

January 16, 1921.

Chess and Checker Headquarters, 212-214 Higgins Building. All chess and checker players invited to join. For further information, see or write the secretary, D. D. Bowes, at the clubrooms.

All communications intended for this department should be addressed to John Dougherty, The Times, Los Angeles, Cal.

AMONG THE FANS.

Among the latest arrivals to join the local club are W. R. Hogsett, Kansas City, Mo., and Dr. F. Wurmser, Lima, O. Mr. Hogsett only expects to remain three months, but Dr. Wurmser says he is going to remain until "Gabriel blows his horn."

Latest returns to hand of the Levine vs. Davis match, being staged in Boston, gives the score as: Levine, 3; Davis, 1; drawn, 12; with 24 games yet to play.

James J. Labor, Richland Center, Wis., writes that he would like to engage some player in a series of games by correspondence.

The local club has engaged rooms 212-215 in the old Union League Building, corner Second and Hill streets, and will be "at home" there to their many friends after February 1.

Denver, Colo., players are holding their city championship tournament in the lobby of the Y.M.C.A., at Sixteenth and Lincoln. L. J. Vair, runner-up last year, did not enter on account of poor health, but a goodly array of talent appears in the line-up, as the following shows. Among the entries appear: Charles H. Reid, present champion, and former Nebraska State champion; C. A. Pesch, also a former Nebraska champion; W. L. Pilcher, who won the championship in 1910; J. E. Munger, who has been Northern Colorado champion; Harry Peters, who has held the Colorado State championship, and three-time winner of the Denver city championship; Emmet Lamont, also a former city champion, and many other notables. Out of the above they ought to pick out most any kind of a champion that they want.

Walter L. Smith of Eldorado, Kan., won the championship of that State in a tournament held in Wichita, January 3 to 6, inclusive. M. D. Teetzel, the genial editor of the A.C.M., officiated as referee. Besides the honor of winning the tournament, the winner is to be further rewarded by a trip to the fifth American tourney, which is to be held in Boston, Mass., in January of next year. D. W. Clawson, Wichita, was the runner-up, being defeated in the finals by Smith by the score of 4 to 2 and 3 draws.

Frank G. Farmer of Wichita, thrice winner of the championship, was high man in the preliminaries, but dropped to fourth place in the semifinals. A four-day grind is too much for players of Mr. Farmer's age. Without detracting from Mr. Smith's ability, in an endurance contest, youth must prevail.

Thirty-two players entered the tourney and many more came to witness the contest. E. H. Payne, last year's winner, has been in Nebraska for some time and will probably enter the Nebraska tournament, which will be held some time next month. Mr. Payne won the Nebraska championship in 1913.

The chess players of Kansas staged their championship tourney at the same time and place as the checker tournament mentioned above. W. W. Livingston of Fort Scott, as usual, was returned the winner.

a—Varies from published play. Drouillard was the first I knew to play it. While it has no particular strength, if properly met, Black does not want to get careless.

b—22-26 or 24-28 are all right, but only draw.

LOS ANGELES TIMES GAME, NO. 1025.

"Edinburgh," 9-13, 22-18.

The following analysis is by J. Jack and given to correct a game played between R. Jordan and W. H. Wragg, and was published in various columns a few years ago.

Black—R. Jordan.		White—W. H. Wragg.
9-13	27-18	11-16-5	27-23b	9-25
22-18	1-6	21-17	11-16	26-22

24-19	6-9	15-10	19-24	23-18
8-12	24-19	24-28	6-10	31-26
18-14	4-8	31-27	3-8	18-15
10-17	29-25	16-19	10-15	25-30
21-14	11-26	23-16	24-27	22-18
6-9	26-23	12-19	15-19	13-22
28-24	16-20	30-26	8-11	18-14

23-14	8-11	10-1	11-15
16-23	19-15	7-11	18-11

a—Varies from a Banks vs. Hynd game, where 26-23 was played.

b—I think Mr. Wragg missed a win at this stage: I submit the following to win:

1-6	25-30-1	24-19	22-26	14-18
11-15-4	11-7	23-18	27-24	W. wins
18-11	3-10	19-23	26-30
9-25	6-24	13-22	24-20
26-22	30-25	23-14	30-26c

c—30-25, 20-16, etc., W. wins.

VARIATION 1.

27-18	3-10	15-10	21-14	23-26

d—25-30, 10-23, 30-25, 17-14, 25-21, 14-9, W. wins.

VARIATION 2.

11-4	6-10	22-18	18-14	10-15

VARIATION 5.

If this variation is sound it corrects above game where 11-16 was played, which apparently loses.

An Open Letter to Wm. M. Garland.

Dear Mr. Garland:

I understand you are responsible for those optimistic bulletin signs I see around Southern California predicting a million population for Los Angeles in 1930.

It seemed to me that almost everybody back in Iowa had the Los Angeles fever and if you can only provide living places for the thousands who want to come you will reach the million mark long before 1930.

I have been accused of being on the pay roll of Newmark Bros. since I came here because I have been boosting Newmark's coffee to all my friends. That is not the case. I am merely displaying the Los Angeles spirit by boosting a good thing.

If you don't use Newmark's in your home may I suggest that you try it and then you will understand why I boost it, for it certainly is wonderful coffee.

Yours truly,

Franklyn Stone

THREE SHEETS IN THE WIND—A TALE OF THE SEA.

Edwards or he to me. He heard the warning and possibly was impressed.

I had a full navigation outfit—charts, books, sextant, and chronometer and I took a departure and the voyage began between, Edwards taking my courses and directions, while I and the cat stood the other. But the cat remained my watchmate only for a while. It had smelled at and became acquainted with every part and person of the old craft. Yet no harm came to Tom; he grew fat and sleek and handsome, under the influence of the fresh trade-wind air and the diet of fish and rice, which I could hardly eat.

But Tom, with the ingratitude of cats, deserted me soon, and I often saw him asleep in Edwards's berth, which possibly was softer than mine. As long as he was being kindly treated it did not matter, and, indeed, I now had serious troubles. I dropped my sextant glass, smashing the horizon, and unable to take sights of the sun, was compelled to rely upon deck reckoning alone. This involved me in being on deck a great deal in my watch below, keeping trace of the course, speed and drift of the old craft, for plotting down on the craft. Edwards, too, had troubles on his mind, and, while he did not confide in me, it was plain that he was worrying about his insurance; the month was nearly gone.

However, a fair wind came at last, and before it we scudded due west, which rose to a gale that demanded the shortening of sail, and then to a hurricane that tore our remaining canvas to ribbons. Edwards and I took turns at the wheel because none of the coolies could be trusted—and it was fatiguing work steering the light ballast vessel under the bare poles.

It was mid-day. I had been wrenching my muscles all the forenoon at the wheel while Edwards slept, and when he came up after dinner I called his attention to the thin line of blue on the horizon above.

"It's the coast of Honshu," I said, "but I don't know what part. I suggest that we round to under a trapaugest and round it out until this goes down, and we can ask of some fishermen."

"This is the fifteenth, according to the log," I said. "We jumped a day crossing the hundredth and eightieth meridian. The insurance expired this noon."

"It's the fourteenth," he rejoined. "I've got a calendar. I can count days if I can't navigate. Rig your tarpaulin and I'll bring her up. Then get your dinner and get what sleep you can. We may have to depend on the anchors."

It was his first departure from the customary cool civility, and I did not care to correct his mistake, and when I had put down the pressure of the wind it had not steadied the craft, but kept her nose slightly up to seas, so that she bobbed up and down merely drifting sidewise three miles an hour. This accomplished I went down, entered up the log—being careful of the date, as instructed—and before sitting down to the wretched dinner, waiting for me, took a generous swig of his grog. When I had finished and opened my door to turn in, Tom, who had been lying in my berth, sprang out of the room and into Edward's, no doubt to escape the chill from the deadline now on the weather side. This angered me more. I closed the deadlight, before wedging my door partly open for ventilation, recklessly took another drink of rum, then turned in.

It was the last drink I have ever taken.

I wakened—or rather came to a half-consciousness—with the crashing of riven timbers in my ears, the waning light of the afternoon streaming through the closed deadlight, and the pungent, poisonous smell of gas in my nostrils. I was not breathing but, with the exercise of all my strength, managed to roll out of my berth to the floor. There the air was a trifle sweeter, and after a half inhalation, I crawled to the door. It was closed and locked from the outside. I turned to the gas jet over my small desk, noticing, even in this extremity that the log book was gone. Then I saw that the thumb cock of the gas fixture was gone, too. It been secured in place with a screw, which had been removed while I slept. With a last effort of strength I staggered to open the deadlight over my berth, but I did not reach it. Tom was in the berth, stretched full length, and feebly moved as my hand fell upon him in lurching over the berth.

Whether or not Edwards had planned an insurance job at the beginning I could not determine, but he must have squared away for the beach soon after I turned in; for the vessel could not have drifted so far before dark. And whether or not he had purposely encouraged my drinking to my own destruction was beyond me, yet he certainly had taken advantage of my condition to remove my gas cock and lock me in to die of asphyxiation, trusting that the wreck would break up in the terrific seas before the locked door or the tinkered gas burner could be discovered. He had possibly placed the cat in with me to die as well, and his precious kindness to the animal, his civility to me, and his laxity about drinking were part of the general plan. I could only guess at these things; but what I knew for a fact was that, if he had reached the beach and save his own life, he was improverished. For he had lost the schooner and his insurance had expired. Yet how could I even guess at what had caused the explosion? Edwards could not have set it off from without, and I had struck no matches.

It was in the hospital at Yokohama, where I was taken by a fisherman who rescued me the next day, that this last puzzle was solved. The American Consul, a white-bearded man, visited me for deposition. And as he talked, and as I looked at him through my swollen eyelids, fleeting memories—half formed and intangible came to me. I had heard his voice somewhere. I had seen that face, and that beard.

"We've got him in jail," he was saying as I grappled with these elusive pictures of the mind, "and he is putting up a great protest about a drunken mate and a falsified log book. But Lloyd's will prosecute him for attempted barratry, and I'll help—not much on your account, for there's no doubt you were drunk, but on account of the cat. It's the meanness of it. A man who will ill-treat a dumb animal is simply mean—mean enough to steal the cross off a donkey's back. That cat saved your life. I've puzzled it out. You must have struck a spark from its back."

[Wildman Magazine and News Service.]

His Suggestion.

A Hoosier traveling man had a hotel room next one occupied by two teachers during the recent teachers' convention. He was very tired and turned in early. But hardly had he closed his eyes when the two teachers came in from the evening session. They discussed it, one of them particularly being endowed with a voice commonly termed strident.

Finally they finished with the subject and he, thinking they were through with [illegible] again and once more began to think of slumbering. But after a little pause the loud talker began on another theme, namely, the hard life of a teacher. After she had discussed it from all angles, she said: "If I only knew where I could succeed I would leave the teaching profession. Now what could I really do as well as I can teach school?"

Before the second teacher could answer her the long suffering man rose to the occasion: "Madam," he shouted through the wall, "you could be an auctioneer."—[Indianapolis News.

The Spell of the Missions.

There is a spell about the old-time missions
That speaks of other days,
There is the spirit of profound devotion
That leads to prayer and praise.

There is a wealth of legend and of story
That dwells within the walls
Where lives were spent in earnest meditation
On what mankind befalls;

Where human lips pronounced a benediction
On those whose heads were bowed:
Where human hearts were filled with sad contrition:
Where human pride was cowed;

Where human longing met with its fulfillment;
Where marriage vows were said:
Where human sorrow wept, in love and anguish,
Above the newly dead.

Whence human forms were borne, with prayers and chanting,
To consecrated ground:
Where human bodies suffered flaggellation:
Where human help was found.

I seem to see the Indians advancing,
Bending beneath the load
That they had borne, while many miles they journeyed
Over the royal road.

I seem to see the priests before the altar,
Feeble and worn and pale,
Pleading for strength and courage and compassion
Lest all their efforts fail.

There is a spell about the old-time missions,
A mystic, magic spell,
Yet, those who built them, only did their duty,
And tried to do it well.

"Aye, man, the best in the whole world," and steer—you should just see that boy steer.

And Jennie thanked him and sat aft with the children with her, close to Jimmy.

The wind was on the port quarter, and steady as a clock, and the White Swan rambled.

They arrived in sight of the breakwater light. There were a lot of white wings out. It was the yacht race, and the White Swan was just in time to mix in the bunch as they rambled home, and I have already told you of how she entered the Watch Horn basin.

A year and a half afterward, in San Diego, James Dunn was sentenced for life for murder. His wife for five years as accomplice.

It came about by Jimmy selling the patents of his "burning cutter" to the ship yards, and someone tumbled, and—that's all.

"End Your Rheumatism
Like I Did Mine"---Says Minister of Gospel
Wife Also Rid of Neuritis
Suffered Tortures For Years — Now Telling Good News to Others

"Don't Believe That Old Humbug About 'Uric Acid' Being the Cause of Rheumatism—It's Not So!"

Emphatically asserting that thousands of unfortunate sufferers have been led into taking wrong treatments under the old and false belief that "URIC ACID" causes rheumatism, Pastor H. W. Reed says:

"As do some of highest medical authorities, I also now know that 'Uric Acid' never did and never will cause rheumatism! But it took me many years to find out this truth. I learned how to get rid of my rheumatism and recover my strength and health through reading 'The Inner Mysteries of Rheumatism,' a work written by an authority who has scientifically studied the cause and treatment of rheumatism and its associated disorders for over twenty years. It was indeed a veritable revelation!

"I had suffered agony for years from rheumatism and its attendant disorders, and Mrs. Reed was also tortured with the demon Neuritis, almost beyond endurance. We had read and talked so much about 'Uric Acid' that even our minds seemed poisoned. But the 'Inner Muysteries of Rheumatism' made it all clear to us, and now we are both free from the suffering and misery we endured so many years. I really believe I was the hardest man in the world to convert. For me to discard the old Uric Acid theory, and what now know to be absolutely false, f the new, scientific understanding of th cause and cure or rheumatism, was a most like asking me to change my re ligious beliefs. But I did change, an it was a fortunate day for me and min when I did so."

NOTE: "The Inner Mysteries o Rheumatism" referred to above b Pastor Reed lays bare facts abou rheumatism and its associated diso ders overlooked by many doctors an scientists for centuries past. It is work that should be in the hands o every man and woman who has th slightest symptoms of rheumatism, neu ritis, sciatica, lumbago or gout. Fo tunately, anyone who sends name an address to the author, H. P. Clearwa ter, 476-A Street, Hallowell, Main will receive a copy of "The Inner My teries of Rheumatism" by mail, pos age paid and absolutely free. Reade of The Times should send now, lest y forget the address. If you are not sufferer, cut out this explanation an hand or mail it to some afflicted frien or acquaintance.

Hobbies and Sanity.

ONE of my friends who is a collector of quaint and curious things in a small way dropped in on me one evening last week. He is one of those impulsive Irishmen who insist on sharing their joys and sorrows with equal lavishness. I saw at once that he had some news to impart. In fact, he was just "busting" to tell me all about it. Knowing that I was in for a siege, and not being sure that the news would be to my liking, I refused to ask the fatal question as to what was on his mind.

He accepted my invitation to walk in the garden for a few minutes, as I had a few chores to do and as he is too old a friend to make company of I had no hesitancy in extending him the invitation. We chatted as I proceeded with my few little odds and ends of work and then entered the house, where we sat up to the open fire that was blazing on the hearth, the evening being cool. Then after he could stand it no longer he burst out:

"Well, he remarked, sort of casual like, "I have finally found what I have been looking for these many months. I picked up a fine Navajo rug in an out-of-the-way second-hand store the other day and as luck would have it just the next evening I was wandering down Main street and there in a window I spies the very Indian jar I have been wanting ever since I came to California.

"And I bought both of them for a mere song," he continued. "The jug, faith I am in doubt as to what you would call it, but the name makes little odds, it's as purty a thing as you ever laid two eyes on." My friend is apt to drop into a soft brogue when he is excited, and he was excited. "Now the rug," he continued, "is a beauty. I misdoubt whether it is Navajo or Yaqui, but little do I care what it is. It suits me fine. Then to cap the climax, one of my good friends, who loves to wander in far places with his camera, came over the other night and gave me a bit of a jug that the Indians use to carry their corn in. It's rough, but it has a shape that tickles me fancy and it now holds a place of honor among me treasures."

As I am something of a lover of the quaint and curious myself I, too, caught my friend's spirit of enthusiasm and as he was wild to have me see his newly acquired possessions we donned our hats and coats, cranked up my old car, and hied away to examine the treasures.

This man has a simple and harmless hobby. I am happy to say he is free from all Sinn Fein foolishness, though he is a son of the Emerald Isle and loves the land of forefathers with all the passionate intensity of which his race is capable.

Profaning the Arts.

BROWSING among my books the other day I came upon this bit of observation made by Master Bernard Palissy, a potter, who lived some 400 years ago.

"Far better it is," says this artist, "that one man or a small number of men should make their profit from some art by living honestly, than that a large number of men should struggle, one against the other, so that they may gain a livelihood save by profaning the arts, leaving things half done."

The surpassing beauty of Palissy's work is such that it is still highly valued and what there is of it in existence is treasured among the art collections of half a dozen famous museums of the Old World.

Palissy was originally a worker in painting and glass, but when the crafts split up, the glass workers becoming artisans, the painters, artists, Palissy followed the latter. But he fell into evil days and for some time his fortunes were very indifferent.

In one of his long rambles over Europe he happened one day to spy a bit of pottery of exquisite beauty. This so fired his artistic soul that he set to work to create a pottery of his own design and creation that would meet his ideal. For fifteen long years he toiled and experimented and though he failed repeatedly to find just the right combination of clay and coloring he finally hit on the proper formula and as a result found himself famous almost immediately.

Now Palissy's fame rests largely on his wonderful pottery. He did a number of things well, but in this he excelled and only because he was a true artist, who refused to do work that would, as the saying is today, just "get by."

Palissy was a living example of Carlyle's definition of genius—"an infinite capacity for taking pains." His is the spirit we lack nowadays. There are undoubtedly thousands of potential Palissys, but they lack the character and determination of "taking pains" to do things right, or in such a way as not to "profane the arts."

Outdoor Enthusiasts.

JUST by way of giving them something to talk about when they return to their ice-bound home my neighbors took a party of their eastern visitors on a camping trip New Year's week. They set out in their "teal-bug" loaded to the gunwales with hampers, thermos bottles, rolls of blankets and all the paraphernalia of a camping outfit.

They turned their faces toward Death Valley, but contented themselves with a shorter trip, returning in three days, in exuberant spirits and with an avowed distaste for mattresses and pillows, gas-heated houses and the routine of indoor life.

They had slept in the open on beds of pine branches over which straw and leaves had been thrown. Then each wrapping himself in his blanket, with the clear starlit sky for a canopy, had slept the deep and untroubled sleep of the wild.

All are enthusiastic lovers of the simple life just now, stoutly declaring that never again will they sleep indoors.

A long unoccupied sleeping porch has been partitioned and provided with sleeping arrangements and all goes well.

But we prosaic lovers of the open fire and the closed door are biding our time. When the rains come and the winds blow and the thermometer falls from its lofty altitude we expect to be aroused in the dead of night by hearing our neighbors chattering and shivering as they move their downy couches to a less exhilarating and more comfortable shelter.

Then we'll all smile and nod and say: "I told you so."

A Day for Wandering.

I set apart a day for wandering;
I heard the woodlands ring,
The hidden white-throat sing,
And the harmonic West,
Beyond a far hillcrest,
Touch its Aeolian string.
Remote from all the brawl and bruit of men,
The iron tongue of Trade,
I followed the calling of a wren
Deep to the bosom of a sheltered glade,
Where interwoven branches spread a shade
Of soft cool beryl like the evening seas
Unruffled by the breeze.
And there—and there—
I watched the maidenhair,
The pale blue iris grass,
The water spider in its pause and pass
Upon a pool that like a mirror was.

I took for confidant
The diligent ant
Threading the clover and the sorrel aisles;
For me were all the smiles
Of the sequestered blossoms there abloom—
Chalice and crown and plume;
I drank the ripe, rich attars blurred and blent,
And won—content!

Turkey Packed in Butter.

A SOUTHERN neighbor told me of a unique Christmas gift sent her, by express, from Arkansas.

Her eldest brother, who still lives on the home place where she was born, had forwarded the old barrel churn used when they were children, in which he had packed two roasted turkeys sealed in butter which had been melted and poured over them. Thus packed they arrived in excellent condition, needing only reheating for the Christmas feast.

"There were eight of us, all exiles at the table," she said, "and we dined with thanks on our tongues, but tears in our eyes. For although we are glad, indeed, to be here, the home of our youth and the friends that live in it still mean much to us."

The churn has been repacked with the finest oranges the Golden State can offer and is now on its way back to the old home, where it will no doubt be opened with great glee.

What is Success?

TIRED of grubbing devil grass out of my lawn the other day, I gladly laid aside my hoe and joined a neighbor who was, he told me, going "round back of the hill to buy some duck eggs from an old codger who lives there."

The "old codger" tempted me, I must confess, more than the duck eggs, for I have, for some unaccountable reason, an inborn distaste for both ducks and their eggs, which always remind me of frogs, fish worms and fish.

But the "old codger" might prove to be anything—a long lost brother for instance. For sometimes I suspect that my neighbors might, in a moment of thoughtlessness, so dub their neighbor.

Arrived at the abode of ducks and codgers, I found the former to be as squawky and aimless as all their kind, but the latter a mellow and friendly old boy, rugged and weather-beaten, with a white fringe of hair, keen, blue eyes and one of those Roman noses that indicates no weakness of character.

We chatted as he packed the artificial-looking eggs into a box, and I found him keen of mind as of eye.

As we walked back home my companion remarked: "Queer old duck. He was a lawyer back East, making good. Might have been on the bench by this time. But he chucked it all and came out here and now he potters around with his ducks and his bees and don't amount to a hill of beans.

"It's hard to explain his failure."

"Failure," quoth I. "Why failure? Isn't he happy, buoyant of spirit, alert of mind? Isn't he independent? Doesn't he make his own living and supply such as have perverted tastes with duck eggs for the breakfast table?"

"Oh, yes. But what does he amount to? Just nothing," was the answer.

And I refrained from asking what he would have amounted to so intrinsically worth while if he had continued quibbling over questions of law and encouraging his fellow-men to each try and get the best of the other.

Fastidious Trixie.

MY NEIGHBOR'S dog Trixie, who, it appears is a lady, has become fastidious these days. Time was, and not so far distant, that a bone of any brand was a boon to her, worth three wags of her stubby tail on any day.

But the holidays have spoiled her, at least for the present. True she makes her usual morning and evening call, but this has become a matter of form and not of business.

Show her a chicken bone and she wrinkles her nose, takes a jaded sniff or two and then turns away and trots off in utter ennui.

For, on every call upon her beat she finds chicken bones temptingly displayed for her delectation. This surfeit of good things has spoiled all her pleasure, taken her appetite, and made her weary of this commonplace world. When chicken bones were available only once or twice a week they were a dearly sought delicacy received with wags and winks of appreciation, but because now there is too much of this, all the joy has departed from them. Of bones as of all good things, as the Greeks well knew when they proclaimed, "Nothing in excess."

Altitudinous Refreshment.

MY FRIEND who lives in a little home perched on a "bench" half-way up a mighty hill invited a number of valley dwellers who are notable climbers to partake of an "altitudinous tea" at his chalet one day last week.

Of course being curious by nature I accepted and found that not only was the meal served at an unusually high level, but that its component parts made up one of the old-fashioned "high teas" beloved of our grandparents. The center of attraction was a deep-bosomed, warm-hearted, chicken pie. This toothsome dish was flanked by other old-time dainties which we consumed with much gusto, voting the while that our ancestors' taste in teas was excellent.

The jester of the party remarked that while modern chefs had, indeed, racked their brains to find out tempting sauces and make fortifications in pastry, they have never succeeded in excelling the culinary triumphs of the American house mother of the nineteenth century. And the other guests with one accord said, "Amen!

There is a satisfaction in old-fashioned things that is seldom found in the new and popular. After all, is it not true that the simple food and plain living of our forefathers may have had something to do with their solidity of character and general dependability?

Communication Established.

THREE sturdy little lads, all apple-cheeked and titian-haired, live with their parents on a hill back of us, and now and then come a-gazing at our garden.

Though I have often tried to strike up a conversation with these wide-eyed little strangers, I have always failed. They only recently arrived in California with their parents, a proud son and daughter of Old Erin, and are at the first stage of knowledge—that of wonder.

I had about decided that we would never hear a word from their burry tongues, when happily we bethought ourselves at their last minute call to ask about Santa Claus's recent visit.

At the magic word their tongues began to click at once and each told eagerly but briefly of his supreme present. Then, with a startled look at each other, they scurried away off up the hill like startled young rabbits that had been caught poaching in a garden.

But I feel elated. Having established a line of communication with them I am sure they will be no longer dumb. Even if I must wait until next Christmas, I know eventually I will hear again the queer combination of broad vowels and closed consonants that mark their use of the language called English.

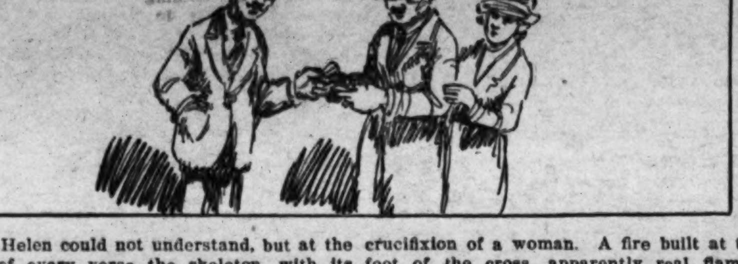
For Men Only.

At the death of a person in Switzerland the family inserts a formal, black-edge announcement in the papers asking for sympathy, and stating that the "mourning urn" will be exhibited during certain hours on a special day. In front of the house where the person died there is placed a little black table covered with a black cloth, on which stands a black jar. Into this the friends of the family drop little black-margined visiting cards, sometimes with a few words of sympathy on them. The urn is put on the table on the day of the funeral. Only men ever go to the churchyard, and then generally follow the hearse on foot.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren.

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.

Helen is Shocked and Indignant at the Risque Scenes in the Folies Bergere.



"FOLIES BERGERE!" Warren instructed the driver, as he bundled Helen into the purring taxi.

"Oh, I didn't know we were go- g there! You said not to dress—that we'd o over to Montmartre."

"We'll go there tomorrow. Feel like a gular show tonight."

"Then can't we go back and dress?" per- sted Helen.

"Nothing doing," frowning at his watch. After 8 now. You look all right—may ave to sit upstairs anyway."

The Boulevard des Capucines blocked ith the theater-going crowd, it was almost alf an hour before they jerked up at the stive entrance of the Folies Bergere.

"Is it a play or a comic opera?" Helen as trying to decipher the giddy posters.

"Some sort of a revue," as he got in line r the box office.

Almost everyone in evening dress, the bby was aflame with color. Gay Parisian raps exposed the striking gowns beneath. her modest traveling-suit Helen felt con- picuously self-conscious.

"Only standing room!" Warren turned om the window.

"Then get seats for another night—and e can dress."

"Feel like taking in this show tonight," owled Warren, always obdurate when his ans were thwarted. "If we stick around me tickets may be turned in. We'll take stroll and come back in ten minutes."

Just outside they were accosted by a man ho held out two tickets.

"How much?" demanded Warren, inter- pting his stream of French.

"Cinquante francs, monsieur. Cinquante," olding up his ten fingers five times.

"Fifty francs," grunted Warren. "Where e they? Good seats?"

"Oui, oui, monsieur."

"Guess you're soaking me—but here you e," drawing out his wallet.

"Oh, dear, don't take them," demurred elen. "They're probably way back—and at's an awful price. I'd much rather go me other night."

"Well, I wouldn't!" selecting a fifty-franc te.

"They may not even accept them," she orried, as they crossed the lobby.

But this anxiety was only momentary, for e doorman tore off the stubs and they ssed into the darkened theater.

"Oh!" she clutched Warren's arm at the eird apparation before them.

An uncanny green spotlight shown on the nter of the stage. The gruesome object illumined was a black velvet coffin, stand- g upright, exposing its ghastly contents—a inning white skeleton.

As the orchestra played a synocopated rge, the skeleton danced a ghoulish jig. e red lights in the eye sockets winked to e clattering bones.

Two undertakers now appeared and stood lemnly beside the coffin. Their French song Helen could not understand, but at the end of every verse the skeleton, with its hands on its hip bones, did a high-kicking caper while the audience roared.

With each verse the skeleton's antics grew more animated until it suddenly fell asunder—a gruesome shower of bones on the calcium-lit stage.

"Oh, how hideous," shivered Helen, as the curtain fell.

"Pas des places, monsieur," Warren had handed their stubs to an usher.

"Eh? What's that?"

Another feminine attendant, in broken English, explained that the tickets were only for general admission—standing room.

"Stung!" snorted Warren. "Well, can't you fix us up some way?" suggestively thrusting his hand into his pocket.

"One minute, monsieur," darting off.

She returned with two camp stools which she placed in the center aisle.

"Darned uncomfortable," grumped Warren when they were settled. "Pretty shaky, too."

"Dear, what did you give her? Five francs? That makes fifty-five! An awful price for——"

An outburst from the orchestra as the curtain rose on a moonlit forest scene. A troop of wood nymphs flocked out. Shrouded in long veils, they floated about a satyr, asleep on a leafy mound.

As the monster awoke, they paused—their arms upheld. Slowly the veils fell from them, leaving them unadorned except for their flowing hair and flesh-colored sashes.

Helen felt her face grow hot. She had read of the startling lack of costumes on the Parisian stage—but had not dreamed of anything so extreme.

Now a nymph was dancing with the satyr, her slenderness gleaming white against his shaggy hide, while the others encircled in frolicking abandonment.

"High cost of clothing needn't worry that bunch," grinned Warren. "A couple of yards of cheese-cloth would outfit the lot."

"It's disgusting," flushed Helen. "They shouldn't allow it."

"Pretty raw," with a shrug. "No Blue Laws over here. But that one with dark hair's a peach."

"Warren!" turning from him in revulsion at this masculine laxity.

It was a relief when the curtain fell.

But as the lights flashed up to hide her flushed embarrassment, Helen bent over the program which she could not read.

Next a gruesome one-act play. A night street scene outside a Montmartre cafe—two art students quarreling over a girl.

As a knife was drawn, the girl, darting up to save her lover, received the stab intended for him. The murderer dashed off, leaving his rival kneeling over the body. While madly he kissed her, in the distance a jangling hurdy-gurdy played a strident tune.

A policeman strolled on. Seeing the officer of the law approach, he lifted the dead girl in his arms and began dancing with her, holding close her limp body as he shouted a drunken song. The policeman, thinking them both intoxicated, strolled on as they waltzed off.

"Cheerful turn," grunted Warren as the curtain fell. "They're strong on spine-shivers over here."

The next was even more gruesome—an operatic scene, the finale of which was the crucifixion of a woman. A fire built at the foot of the cross, apparently real flames, shot up around her writhing body.

"How can they put on such ghastly things?" shuddered Helen when the curtain dropped on this harrowing spectacle.

"Well, here's where we get a let-up," for a general stirring of the audience proclaimed the intermission. "Come on, I want to stretch," his long legs cramped from the low camp-stool.

The whole audience seemed to flock out to the glittering lounge. It was a huge, bazaar-like place lined with stalls where refreshments, flowers and souvenirs were on sale.

"Oh, look—how horrid!" as they approached a table covered with small nude figures, placarded "Mlle. Devilder"—the star of the revue.

"Want one?" grinned Warren.

"Oh, this is interesting," she paused to watch an artist with rapid skill draw crayon portraits for five francs each.

Turning from the stall, she was amazed to find a painted, conspicuously gowned girl flirting with Warren. As she indicated a vacant table, he laughed good-naturedly and shook his head.

"Warren, what did she want?" when the girl shrugged away.

"Guess she wanted me to buy her a drink."

Before they had encircled the lounge, Helen saw several other girls shrewdly appraising Warren. Her resentment was mingled with a thrilled pride in her own secure possession.

A loud gong sent them all crowding back into the theater.

The second part opened with the "Ballet des Oiseaux Blancs"—the white ostrich-feather costumes making an exquisite billowy scene. Various other ballets followed—with costumes amazingly abbreviated.

"Well, their silk stockings don't cost 'em much," commented Warren.

"Dear, I noticed that! Not a single girl has worn stockings. Look, with even those modern costumes and high-heeled slippers—their legs are bare. It's hideous!"

"Oh, I don't know," drolly. "That's a matter of taste. Saves the laundry bill, too."

Before the final scene, a manager came out and made some announcement, which was received with a buzz of approval.

There was a stir of expectancy as the curtain rose on a gorgeous oriental setting. A fountain shot up and the stage swarmed with veiled figures. The veils, gauzy thin, revealed the supple forms beneath.

Then the stage was darkened and a spotlight thrown on a curtain in the rear. Slowly it parted—disclosing the climactic sensation of the evening.

On a black velvet wall glittered a huge rhinestone spiderweb. In the center hung a woman with outstretched arms—her costume consisting of a tasseled diamond ornament suspended from a diamond chain about her waist.

For a long moment the strong searchlight shone upon her. Then slowly, amid the applause of the audience, came the final curtain.

It was not until they were outside, with the chill air cooling Helen's face, that she expressed her indignation at the closing tableau.

"Oh, I never want to go to a place like that again!"

"Good show. Worth the money," chuckled Warren, steering her through the outpouring crowd.

"Don't be horrid!" flamingly. "We'll not go to a theater again while we're here!"

"We won't, eh? Well you can stay at the hotel—but I'll take in all that's going. What d'you expect of a Paris revue—a Chautauqua lecture or a Sunday-school entertainment? That was pretty thick in spots—but it was a good show. Worth fifty francs to any tired business man!"

Siberia Is Now the Starveling of the World.

BY A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

WITH enemies within and enemies without, Siberia is now the starveling of the world.

In previous articles I have mentioned the great Amur River, running from east to west 3000 miles across Siberia, on whose bosom is freighted for the world's consumption the products of a vast and fertile interior.

Almost paralleling this, bordering Manchuria, and also serving as an artery for the riches of Siberia, Manchuria and Mongolia, is the Chinese Eastern Railroad, a corporation controlled by Russians and Chinese, with the funds held in the Russian-Asiatic Bank. Incidentally, the Shanghai branch of this bank, with its magnificent granite building, has just been taken over by the Chinese government.

It was into this bank that the Chinese government has been paying the Russian part of the Boxer indemnity. This money had been used to keep up the Russian embassies in China and Japan. Prince Kudasheff, the Czarist, who has been posing in China, as Bahkmetieff, has here, as Russian Ambassador, loudly wailed at this. The French also wailed, for they had been supporting him in his policies.

However, China held to her course firmly. She demanded that the Japanese, who were in possession of the railroad, with 100,000 soldiers on guard, give way to Chinese. She also notified the international committee, headed by the British, who thought they were controlling the situation, to keep hands off.

On October 4 the Vladivostok papers stated that French and British asserted that the Japanese were secretly arming bandits all along the line to stir up trouble.

Up to April of this year 10,000 Russians had been able to efficiently guard this road.

Charge Japanese with Violating Pact.

THESE guards, on April 3, as reported in the News Summary of Vladivostok, sent this notice out to the world, which tells its own story:

"HARBIN, April 3.—Having heard that Japanese troops are to be transported from South Manchuria into Transbaikalia, the railway employees have resolved: When in 1919 all the Allies entered Russian territory they declared that they would not violate the sovereign rights of the Russian people. At the present time all Allies who signed this declaration have removed their troops, except Japan. Japan alone does not comply with her promise given with other nations, and regardless of her separate, friendly assurances does not recall her troops and threatens to occupy all of Eastern Siberia. She conducts war with Russia without having declared it. Being located within the zone of the Chinese Eastern Railway, on Chinese territory, we are unable to hinder her actions. We, the railway employees, find that we can only appeal to the better feelings of humanity. Such a situation in which the Japanese have put us has no precedent in history. We, Russians, are forced to aid in transporting Japanese troops, guns and ammunition which on the next day will be used against our brothers. We are forced to become accomplices of Japan and become murderers and traitors to our country. If we do not use force, cannot use it, we must not be denied the right to express love for our country and people and say we cannot comply with Japanese demands and will not transport her troops and military cargoes."

On April 25, a deputation handed an appeal to M. Pimenoff, managing director of the Chinese-Eastern Railway, including seven demands, one being that no Japanese troops be permitted to use the railroad.

Urin's Arrival Stirs Up a Furor.

EARLY in September M. Urin, representing the government at Verkhne-Udinsk, which is trying to unite all the factions in Siberia, and get from under foreign dictation, went to Pekin, where he was soon joined by M. Agareff from Vladivostok. China in return sent its former Ambassador to Russia, Liu-Chin-Nen, to Verkhne-Udinsk.

The diplomatic corps, particularly of Japan, were in a furor. It looked as though Russia were recovering and getting a functioning Far Eastern government. Ataman Semenoff—or correctly, Semeonov—had just been supplied with a large sum of gold and Baron Ungern, both acknowledging the now fallen Wrangel as chief, were about to carry out some plans regarding the Chinese Eastern Railroad which the Prince Kudasheff and Japan hoped much from. This was what appeared in the papers of Vladivostok:

"PEKING, Sept. 28.—The Chinese government has demanded from M. Urin, representative of the Verkhne-Udinsk government that he confirm in writing that he is in no way head of a diplomatic mission representing Russia as a whole or of the government of the Far East. Urin was again asked to confirm before the diplomatic corps that he arrived in Peking only for the purpose of establishing trade relations between China and the bordering Siberian districts. The representatives of the great powers have declared categorically that no one shall be given the rights as Russian diplomatic representatives or consular agents in China, since China has officially refused to recognize the Russian Ambassador, Prince Kudasheff."

In Vladivostok papers also appeared these items:

"PEKING, Aug. 8.—The Chinese authorities are informed of a plan to seize the Chinese Eastern Railway by an element of the Russians (Semeonov or Semenoff) supported by the Japanese. According to this plan, bridges, etc., are to be blown up and the opposing faction blamed. Then the Japanese and their henchmen will demand that they be permitted to guard with arms the railroad which will be in such numbers that it will be seizure."

Would Move Japanese Troops Secretly.

"PEKING, Aug. 8.—China does not pay any attention to the threat to the Chinese Eastern Railway by Japan. Recently 1000 cars were demanded by Japan for the evacuation of the Japanese troops from the Transbaikal. The evacuation of these troops was announced several times, but without making any statements as to the points these troops would be evacuated. The Journal de Peking devotes to this question a number of articles from which it appears that the Japanese troops from the Transbaikal region will be stationed along the Chinese Eastern Railway. A telegram anese command is preparing quarters for a numerous army along the railroad. A number of confidential telegrams were recently published by the North China Star which confirm the plan of Japan to seize the Chinese Eastern Railroad. A telegram sent by a Japanese general to Ataman Semenoff says: 'Japan will carry into effect her plans without taking into consideration the views of the other powers. The Japanese government will never agree to recognize an independent state in the Far East and cannot recognize the Vladivostok government. With your assistance the commander of the Japanese forces, Suzuki, will be able to continue to protect the boundaries of Mongolia and Manchuria.' Gen. Suzuki received recently the following cable from the Japanese authorities: 'Inform Ataman Semenoff that we approve of his plan to organize a volunteer corps in Harbin. We advise him to enlist only reliable officers and privates. The organization has to be carried out according to the orders of the Japanese authorities and the troops have to be ready and to be brought secretly to Harbin at the moment this will be required.' Thus we see that Japan is preparing to carry out her plans and already prepares public opinion of the inevitable organization of a new Russian government in the Far East to consist of Semenoff, etc."

On October 6 the following was in the papers of Vladivostok:

"Exchange of views between Paris and Tokio is taking place in connection with the present events in Peking. An ultimatum presented by France and Japan to China is expected shortly. The diplomatic corps at Tokio considers the situation very grave. The Chinese government closed all the Russian postoffices and canceled concessions and ordered Japan off the railroad and sent this out: 'Peking, Oct. 7.—The Chinese government has prepared a reply to the proposal of the diplomatic corps in which the Chinese government was requested to permit Prince Kudasheff to unofficially represent the interests of the Russian residents in China. The Chinese reply is to the effect that the Chinese government itself will safeguard the interests of the Russian residents on Chinese territory and will be guided by the regulations of international law'."

The struggle for this strategic road, with China in possession, is going on bitterly at this moment. History will be much affected by the outcome.

Semeonov, or Semenoff, as our newspapers call him, appeared at the fall of the Kerensky government with his Cossacks. From that time until last month he has been actively supported by money and men and arms by the Japanese. German atrocities pale into insignificance beside what has been reported of him. To raise men he used conscription by force and I was told by a returned American army officer that he had to place an officer behind each four men to keep them from mutiny. Everywhere the peasants rose against him. All the Allies but Japan soon repudiated him.

Begs for Life of Her Son.

I HAVE a friend who stood by when an old Russian woman crawled to his feet begging for the life of her son who had tried to escape and was to be shot. Semeonov shot her through the head and, kicking her, ordered "that carrion be thrown out of my sight."

It was Semeonov, led and supported by the Japanese, who was guilty of the "death trains" we read of last year. One of our soldiers told of seeing sixty cars loaded with dead and dying from typhus and cholera. The sick were jerked out of the houses and thrown like sacks into open cars and left to die. Anyone going near was shot.

This man traveled like a Pasha. He had a special train, guarded by Japanese, in which traveled forty beautiful women whose magnificent furs and diamond-studded slippers were the scandal of the Orient.

Chita, near Lake Baikal, has been his headquarters. From here he sent emissaries to China and Japan on errands of propaganda and to carry and hide away a fortune for himself. All Shanghai papers told a short time ago that his wife had arrived there with much gold, and that it was thought that Semeonov himself expected to make Shanghai his home when he had to flee Siberia.

China promptly came out with the announcement that he would be jailed as soon as he crossed the border. Japan deserted him. His army vanished. Outside his door stood a high-powered automobile, armored, and a flying machine so that when he had to flee he might make speed. He was in a quandary to know where to go. No place would give him asylum. He couldn't very well cross the mountains or the sea.

Sails Away in Airplane to Unknown Haven.

BUT there came a night when he had to go in a hurry, as Chita fell to the opposing forces, and there were no Japanese friends by. He sailed away by airplane, and may be flying yet, so far as report goes, for at this writing no report has come out as to where he landed.

Japanese papers at hand are now asking who will pay back the money Japan loaned him. A Japanese general spoke of him as an amusing, high-spirited man who could not have acquired leadership without Japanese assistance.

That Russia cannot get her balance when an enemy within her own land demands 100,000 cars—for which she does not pay—when she supports hundreds of thousands of soldiers who terrorize her population to such an extent that they cannot produce, is not surprising. Japan has brought this on Siberia and the helpless Russians by her aggressions and ambitious aims to conquer the world.

Were 1000 cars to be taken out of use at any time on this coast, business would be demoralized and certainly with our methods of specialization in farming we would more quickly starve than Russians, who are entirely self-sustaining, outside of cities.

VISIONS OF THE NIGHT.

BY W. F. CLARKE.

SOMETIMES, in sleep, dreams will seem to focus the wandering thoughts of past days, and so make plain for us what, in our waking hours was hazy and obscure. The thoughts themselves seem to take advantage of our unconscious moments, and without any effort of our own, work themselves out to a conclusion; though our bodily eyes may be close shut, we see with the eyes of our imagination the solution of our doubts and difficulties in a living picture—a vision.

I had been discussing future plans with my daughter, a tall girl of seventeen, the age when girls are apt to develop a spirit of independence, and, as is often the case, we seemed unable to arrive at the same point of view. Betty was for setting out on a path of her own; she had no wish to go further along with me, on mine. This set my mind working on the problem of the relationship of parent and child, and I was inclining to the conclusion that perhaps, after all, children at seventeen might be left to plough their own furrow, my work was done; so what need had I for worry?

I went to bed in good spirits, Betty and I being quite good friends. The subject was, as I thought, dismissed from my mind, and I was soon asleep. But the problem refused to be smothered in this unsolved state; it worked itself out to a conclusion, which was presented to my consciousness in a vivid pictorial way in my dreams.

First I dreamt that Betty and I were in an Indian temple hung with rich eastern tapestries, where the dim light from colored lamps, the smoke and perfume of incense, and the rhythmic beating of music made their combined appeal to the emotions. We were being initiated by a priestess into the mysteries of the temple worship, when suddenly I realized my reason was becoming blind, and my emotions carrying me I knew not where. At the same time I saw that I was involving the child beside me in the perilous plunge I was taking into unknown deeps. The sight of Betty, sane and unmoved, roused me to make an effort to shake myself free from the powers of darkness and hurry with her out of the temple. With this effort I awoke. In this dream Betty seemed in no danger, except from my actions; it was her presence that saved me.

After this dream I was soon asleep again, and I then dreamt the second and more vivid dream of the two.

I found myself on the bank of a muddy river, and out in the stream I saw a boat, in which were a man and a girl, whose faces I could not see; from them I learned that Betty, who is a strong swimmer, had dived off the boat and was under the water. There were other boats and a launch on the river. Soon I became very anxious, as no Betty appeared. At last, after some minutes, very long minutes they seemed to me, I saw the top of her head and her forehead (with a narrow velvet band round it) appear near the bank. No face came up. I swam out to her and was able to lift her on to the bank; not the grown-up Betty of today, but the little child with the velvet band round her hair, of years ago, whose picture I have always kept by me. She was blue, but attempting to breathe. I emptied the water from her mouth, and encouraged her to breathe by calling out to her, "You're all right, Betty! You're all right!" I was conscious, at the same time, of a tall figure at my side repeating my words, "You're all right, Betty!" Oddly enough, I thought that this person was the grown-up Betty.

I awoke with Betty coming to herself again; and great was my relief. In this dream conditions were reversed: it was with the help of my watchful care that Betty had arrived, through the perils of childhood, at the grown-up age where she and I could stand together on the same ground. Here was my problem solved. After years of parental care and anxiety, when the lives of our children are largely in our hands, there comes a time when they must stand their ground with us, and share with us the shaping of their own destinies. But not only was this problem settled; another element was introduced in the first dream; not only are parents helpful to children, the relationship is a mutual one, children can be, and often are, a help they little realize to grown-up, aged men and women. There is more wisdom than we are apt to think in the old advice "to go to bed and think over it," when we are worrying over some vexed question. Our minds are capable of doing some very good work in sleep, even though their activity may only occasionally be revealed to us in helpful dreams.

CARE OF THE BODY.

constipation, rickets and ultimately consumption.

To supply this deficiency, fresh fruit or vegetable juice should be added to the diet. Any fruit or vegetable juice will do, but it must be fresh, not cooked. Cooking largely destroys the vitality of the food and deorganizes about three-fourths of the mineral elements.

The dehydrating of orange juice would to a great extent have a similar effect.

Give children fresh fruit or vegetable juice. That is no "wonderful discovery."

However, this will furnish a new market for "cull" oranges, and so help the orange growers, also the manufacturers of the powder, even if it doesn't much help the babies.

Typhoid Fever.

FOLLOWING is by J. H. Kellogg, M.D., in Good Health:

"For a generation the practice of feeding typhoid fever patients almost exclusively upon milk has, through the recommendation of physicians, become more and more common, until it is now almost universal. The facts given by bacteriological research show most conclusively, however, that this practice is in the highest degree erroneous. Milk is known to be a most excellent culture medium for typhoid fever germs. In view of this fact, it seems strange that any doctor should still persist in prescribing it as an article of diet for typhoid fever patients.

"The milk and brandy diet in vogue thirty years ago, and still recommended by physicians who neglect to keep apace with the world's progress in scientific therapeutics, permitted about 70 per cent of the patients to recover. The elimination of brandy during late years has improved the patient's chances, reducing the mortality to about 15 per cent, but a combination of rational diet and treatment is capable of reducing the mortality very much lower, to 2 or 3 per cent at least. There seems no other reason for the popularity of milk as a routine diet in fever cases except its thinness.

"For more than twenty years the writer has been thoroughly convinced that the use of milk is objectionable in typhoid cases, and has on this account discarded it. Twenty-five years ago the observation was made that under a milk diet the tongue became quickly coated, sores covered the lips, the breath was exceedingly foul and the bowel discharge putrid. When gruels prepared from barley and other cereals were substituted for milk, great improvement was at once observed, diarrhea was lessened—generally disappearing entirely—the tongue became cleaner, sores disappeared and the fecal discharges were far less offensive. The adoption of Liebermeister's suggestion to feed the fever patient fruit soup was followed by the happiest results. Fruit soup, which is highly popular among the Germans, consists of a sort of gruel prepared by boiling for a long time such fruits as dried apples, prunes, figs, etc., straining the juice, and thickening it with corn starch or sago."

To this I add that absolutely nothing should be fed in typhoid fever, or any other fever, except a little fresh fruit juice, diluted with water because the digestive juices are absent, and food becomes a poison. This, with drugging and doping, accounts for the fatalities in typhoid fever. The patients are killed, not by the fever, which is a curative process, but by the treatment.

Religious Tyranny.

IT IS not only in New England that "blue laws" have prevailed. They were a part of the Calvinist religion, until even that religion was forced, in a measure, to compromise with the times. In Geneva, in the eighteenth century, people had to rise at 5 o'clock in summer and 6 in winter, under penalty of a fine; they were allowed but two dishes at their tables; and not more than one fire was allowed in a house.

On the other hand, in Toulouse, France, a bigoted Roman Catholic community, the anniversary of that supreme crime of history, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, was always legally celebrated by a two-days' festival. In Toulouse no Protestant could be a lawyer, a physician, a surgeon, an apothecary, a bookseller, a grocer, or a printer; he could not keep either a Protestant clerk or a Protestant servant; and in 1748 an unhappy woman had been fined 3000 francs for acting as a midwife, without having first become a Roman Catholic.

The passion for "self-expression" is the supreme curse of our age, says Prof. Irving Babbitt of Harvard. "Self-control" is the antidote and the cure for the "ethical passivity" of the age.

One of the problems connected with the settlement of the Jews in Palestine is that of keeping the land out of speculation. It is proposed to apply the land laws of Moses for that purpose.

The Proxy and How It Worked Out.

BY J. MORTON LEWIS.

"YES, Isabel," I said, "I got your wire."

Isabel seated herself in my most comfortable chair, and, with a soft rustle, composed her skirts.

"Then you expected me?"

"Naturally," I assented, "since your telegram said you would arrive at 12:15." I drew out my watch. "It is now twenty past. You are most delightfully punctual, so I gather the business must be extremely urgent."

Isabel frowned and studied the toe of a small, grey kid shoe.

"Don't be cynical!" She paused and laid a hand caressingly on my knee. We were seated, facing one another, before the open window of my chamber in Clements Inn. "I want your advice," she said confidentially.

"No serious law case pending, I hope?" I answered.

"No; much more serious than that."

Isabel shook her head.

I raised my eyebrows and waited for her to proceed.

For a moment she smoothed an imaginary crease in her dress, then suddenly—

"You know Jack Hetherington?"

"Yes, I answered.

Before my steady eyes hers fell, and a blush rose to her face.

"He and I are engaged," she said.

"Then I must congratulate you," I responded. "I hope you will be very happy." I gave it up in despair. "I am afraid I am no good at those pretty speeches. Practice makes perfect, and I am an old bachelor, you know, and the necessity for them doesn't often arise."

Isabel laughed and surveyed me, her head coquettishly on one side. I ought to have known the sign.

"You poor old dear," she said. "Thirty and unmarried, with two grey hairs visible over the left ear."

I indignantly brushed the offending lock out of sight.

"You came to me for advice," I said as sternly as possible. It is hard to be stern with Isabel.

"Yes," she responded, serious once again. "And I want it very, very badly. Jack came to see father last Monday week."

I nodded.

"And father refused his consent—said Jack's income wasn't enough; you know the usual excuses."

"And yet you are engaged?" I queried.

"Secretly," said Isabel.

"Oh!" I ejaculated. "And you want me to help win your father over to your side?"

Isabel hesitated.

"Not exactly," she said. "You see, Jack and I must meet, to go to the theater together, and that sort of thing. Engaged couples do, don't they?"

"I believe it's a way they have," I said.

Isabel paused. It was a more protracted pause than usual, and I suspected something underlay its length.

"And so I thought I'd get engaged to someone else. You understand?"

"I am afraid I don't quite follow your reasoning," I was forced to admit.

In ordinary circumstances Isabel would have epitomized my obtuseness as crass stupidity. As it was, she leaned towards me, and went to great length to explain her exact meaning in coaxing tones, another sign which should have given me warning.

"You see, Dickie, dear," she said—Isabel and I are third cousins, therefore she is privileged to call me by my Christian name, and also to add a term of endearment if she wishes to cajole some favor from me—"it would have to be somebody who knew us both. Then he could take me to the theater, or pretend to, so that I could meet Jack. And on Sundays I could go for a walk with him."

"And meet Jack?"

Isabel did not respond.

"An exceptionally well-thought-out plan," I said. "Might I ask who was responsible for its inception?"

"It was my idea," confessed Isabel, frankly.

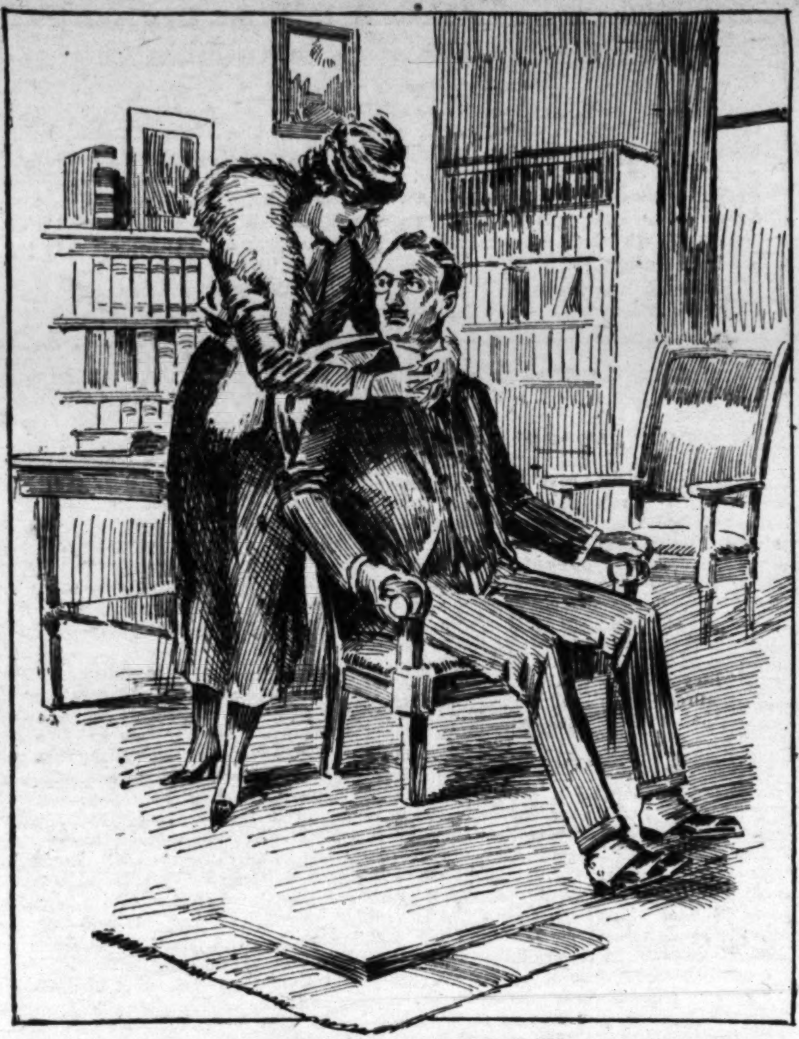
"I thought so," I replied.

"Jack and I talked it over for a long time last night, and we came to the conclusion there was only one person we could ask."

Isabel paused. Her calm self-possession was deserting her, and, having a prescience of what was to follow, I was extremely careful not to break the silence.

"Yes," repeated Isabel, "there was only one person we could ask. That was why I came to see you today."

Isabel folded her hands on her lap and sat gazing at me, watching the effect of her words.



"Dickie, Dear, You'll Help Us!"

"Well, my dear girl," I responded, "if you tell me whom you have fixed upon, I will advise you to the best of my ability as to whether your choice is a wise one."

The effect of my words was electrical. Isabel rose, and there was a swish of silken skirts. The next moment she was bending over the back of my chair, her arms caressingly around my neck, her face close to mine, so close that a loose wisp of her hair touched my cheek.

"Dickie, dear, you'll help us?"

I released her arms, and, rising faced her.

"You want me to pretend to be engaged to you, to deceive your father, in order that you may go about with this Jack Hetherington? No, Isabel, I won't! I'm surprised, deeply grieved that you should think of asking me such a thing!"

It was a paternal speech, delivered in a paternal tone of reproof, but Isabel only smiled provokingly.

"You dear old serious silly!" she said. "Just think of the romance of it! And you will help us, I know you will!"

It was an awkward predicament. Here was I, a barrister, making my living by furthering the ends of justice, debating in my mind whether I should assist a young couple to deceive an obdurate parent. It is hard to deny Isabel anything, and I had already begun to weigh the pros and cons.

"But what will your father say when he finds out?"

It was a weak step; one I ought never to have taken.

"Dickie," said Isabel, "remember what you yourself said to me not six weeks ago. 'One must live for the day only.' Besides, father won't say anything much when he does find out."

"Not to you," I said. "It would be hard to say anything to you."

She looked at me, her head on one side, her eyes provokingly merry.

"It is hard to say 'No,' so you just won't say it. Now, when are you coming down to see father?"

I protested my intention of having nothing to do with the affair.

"Isabel," I said firmly, "I will have nothing to do with your infamy."

But in the end I yielded, as I had always yielded for the fifteen years I had known her. She might have pleaded and have stormed, and she would have failed, but hers was a wisdom far beyond such devices; an essentially original wisdom, for she took my consent for granted from the first.

"And you will come and see father tomorrow," she said finally, and then whisked me off to luncheon at my expense at the Carlton.

"On such an occasion you ought to pay," I said. "Even a laborer is worthy of his hire."

"Pardon me," retorted Isabel, "men always pay for their fiancees. I see I must teach you the duties of your post."

And so I became engaged to Isabel. I, who had never thought of marriage, and even now was only acting as proxy.

Lunch over, I went to Watroloo to see her safely into her train for Cobham, and it was a very sober-minded, and not a little bewildered barrister who returned to his chambers to read up an important brief for the morrow's court.

The next evening I traveled down to Cobham to interview Isabel's father. To say that I felt a hypocrite throughout the journey would be to underrate my feelings.

At the station Isabel met me.

"You are not nervous, Dickie, dear," she said.

As I looked at her in her snowy-white muslin dress and straw hat, adorned with a single blue ribbon, at her dainty figure and pretty face, her laughing blue eyes and chestnut hair, a shade of envy crossed my mind.

"Isabel," I said severely, "if you make fun of me, I shall jilt you."

She took my arm.

"No you won't, Dickie, dear," she said.

And so, arm-in-arm, we walked along the country road; and arm-in-arm we entered the gate of Stanmore, where Isabel lived.

Mr. Brampton was a retired banker, a distant relative of my father and one of his dearest friends.

He saw me in his study, amidst a pile of books relating to banking and legal questions. To say that he was surprised at my request would be only too true, but he was none the less delighted.

"My dear Dick," he said, "it has been the greatest wish of my life for you two to come together, and it would have been your father's had he been alive."

Then he called Isabel into the room to give us his paternal blessing.

She entered, the little humbug, with a most becoming blush upon her face.

"I hope you will be very happy together," said Mr. Brampton.

"I know we shall," returned Isabel, and brazenly kissed me.

"Isabel," I said, when we were alone, "you have missed your vocation, but, nevertheless, you are a most shameless, deceiving little minx!"

We were walking in the garden together. She impudently flipped me on the nose with a dainty, scented lace handkerchief.

"It will be a good rehearsal for you, Dickie," she said, "and you want heaps more yet. I never saw a man look so nervous and uncomfortable in my life."

"Enough to make one," I said, dejectedly, as I thought of what lay before me.

But Isabel only laughed.

And so the comedy commenced. I slipped on her finger an engagement ring Jack Hetherington had given her. I took her to the theater, or rather I took her up to town and there handed her into the charge of her proper fiance, while I went to the club, to pass away the time, until the hour came around for me to see her home.

Sundays I spent at the Bramptons, playing my part to the best of my ability, dreading discovery each moment, while Isabel, acting her role of fiancee, took an almost maternal interest in my welfare, restricting me to two cigars throughout the day, and generally aggravating me in every manner conceivable.

"Isabel," I said to her one evening, "if this goes on much longer, and you do not treat me with proper respect, I shall break off the engagement."

"Then," retorted Isabel, "I shall sue you for breach of promise, and the damages will just furnish a nice little home for Jack and myself."

Summer passed and early autumn. After an exciting day in the courts, I felt I needed a change so I took an early train down to Cobham.

"Isabel," I said, "we are going to the theater together."

"But I shan't have time to tell Jack," she replied.

"Hang Jack!" I retorted. "You and I are going together. I am tired of letting another fellow take my fiancee about, and I am going to exercise my authority."

"Oh!" said Isabel.

Nevertheless, she came.

I took her to see a musical comedy that was then the rage in London. As she sat by my side in our box, and I glanced at her, her eyes sparkling with merriment, her face wreathed in smiles, I envied Jack Hetherington, and thoughts came into my mind that should never have found a place there.

"Well," I said, when it was all over, and we were seated in the train on our way back to Cobham, "did you enjoy it?"

"Awfully!" she replied. Then, for the first time since our engagement, she became serious. "You are awfully good to me, Dickie."

It was foolish, perhaps, but I bent down and kissed her, and she made no demur.

"Because I want you to be happy, dear," I said.

She smiled.

"I wonder if I shall ever be able to repay you? If ever there is anyone you care for, let me know, won't you? and I'll tell her what an awfully good boy you are."

"Yes," I said, meditatively, "I will."

Isabel looked quickly at me.

"Is there anyone?" she asked.

"I don't quite know yet," I replied guardedly.

"Oh!" said Isabel, for the second time that evening.

The rest of the journey we spent in discussing the case on which I was engaged at the courts. It was a very important murder trial in which I was appearing for the defendant, and one which promised to make my name if I were successful.

"And when will you know?" asked Isabel.

"I expect the verdict will be out on Thursday," I replied.

"Then if you are successful you shall take me to the theater to celebrate the event."

"And if I lose it, we will go, so that I may forget my failure," I replied.

"I shall have to look after you, you must learn to be less extravagant now we are engaged."

"Then I will meet you at Waterloo at 7:15 on Thursday," I said next morning, when I left Stanmore; "and in the mean-

Mucus-free Diet.

AS SHOWN by the late Dr. Powell of Los Angeles the main cause of disease is the accumulation of waste matter, or "pathogen," in the blood, which obstructs the free flow of the blood stream. With this goes foulness of the colon, causing autointoxication and acidity of blood. This is caused by overeating of mucus-forming and phosphate foods.

Following is an extract from an address by Arnold Ehret, read before the twenty-fourth annual convention of the American Naturopathic Association in New York:

"It is an open secret that diet is the weak point of physicians, because the science of healing lacks a dietetic system that is based upon scientific and fundamental principles and facts and complete enough to be used in every diseased condition. The mucusless diet system fulfills these two claims completely, for it has proven itself true in my practice in Europe and in this country, during a period of over fifteen years, as the main factor of healing. It works identically the same in the human body as instinctive self-healing does in the animal. This proves beyond question that it is the only natural healing process of the body itself. This system is based upon my mucus theory—now a well proven fact—and makes plain the former mysteries of every kind of disease. The disease producing material is a partially digested decaying semiliquid mostly, and in this condition is generally known as mucus.

"It is easily proven and demonstrated that everyone living on a mixed diet or a starchy vegetatrian one has a more or less clogged up system with mucus, whether sick or not. This foundation cause of every disease is going on from childhood and even before, if animal flesh and animal food products, fats and starchy foods are eaten. It has long been recognized by students and scientists that these foods are not suitable for mankind, as the larger portion cannot be digested fully, but are acted on by the gastric juices, making a toxic mucus which decays, ferments, produces gas, acidosis and many kinds of toxins, and this has a sticky and gluey condition and clogs the circulation, so that the body needs a shock like a cold to start the elimination of a portion of it. If physical treatments are resorted to, they can only eliminate a portion as long as the supply is not stopped by a change from the mucus forming foods and overeating is not indulged in. Consequently it is reasonable, natural and self-evident that the disease producing eating must be stopped if you will have complete success from physical treatments. . . .

"The human body has thousands of feet of small and almost invisible tubes through which the blood circulates, like the water in a water motor. If the blood stream contains sticky mucus from wrong eating, the body machine has to run and to work under a continual friction like a car slowed down by applying the brake. This explains the long existing mystery of weakness and also that of high blood pressure and the high temperature of fever and inflammation. During the process of healing by the mucusless diet system, the same friction occurs, because the mucus is dissolved and is taken into the blood stream. But it occurs only for a time periodically, because the blood stream cannot carry it all at once."

Orange Juice.

FOLLOWING is from a Los Angeles paper:

"California oranges as life-savers for starving babies! That is the newest development of science after a long period of investigation, as indicated in a wire from the convention of the National Society of Biological Chemists now in session at Chicago, received today by C. P. Wilson, research chemist of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange of Los Angeles.

"The information contained in the telegram is to the effect that Dr. J. F. McClendon, head of the department of psychology of the University of Minnesota, and J. P. Sedgwick, an eminent child specialist, had reported to the convention that they had made the discovery that dehydrated orange juice had proven particularly efficacious in the treatment of malnutrition and exhaustion in children, due to improper food or the lack of sufficient food.

"Experiments had been carried on with twenty-five children from 6 months to 3 years of age, establishing the fact that the growth rate had increased by the feeding of dehydrated orange juice from 50 to 60 per cent. This increase is twice that which had been produced by the administration of dehydrated spinach juice.

"Dehydrated orange juice is nothing more than the powder which is left after the water content of the juice is eliminated by the dehydration process. Its efficacy is due to the fact that it is nothing less than life-giving vitamines in a highly concentrated form.

"That orange juice has a high content of vitamines has been known for some time, but until now no process had been reached whereby it could be recovered and placed upon a successful commercial basis. The dehydration process has solved the problem.

"Officials of the exchange said today that they were highly gratified to know of the discovery and also the fact that California oranges had been used in the experiments, as it opens new and vast possibilities for the orange growers of Southern California."

This is a truly "wonderful discovery" of medical science.

All students of diet know that milk is deficient in iron. For that reason, the liver of the newborn infant contains a large surplus of iron, which is gradually used up, so that if milk feeding is continued after the weaning time the child suffers. This is especially true if infants are fed on sterilized or pasteurized milk, starvation foods, in which the mineral elements have been deorganized by heat. They then develop

The gladness of the days of old;
From chaparral, with flocks athrong,

And ringing scythes, with laughter blent,
From fields where dusky toilers bent.

> EXTRACT FROM FATHER CRESPI'S DIARY.

> We set forth in the morning, and entering on the plain saw a mountain range covered with snow, which we also saw beginning in the canada of Santa Clara: from the hills we saw the River Porciuncula; we crossed the plain to the south-east; we reached the river; we forded it, observing by its sands, sweepings, fallen trees and holes on both sides for a few days before there had been a great overflowing of the river bed; we went forward another three leagues to the Valley of San Miguel and there stopped in the same place where on the 30th of July we had been camped.

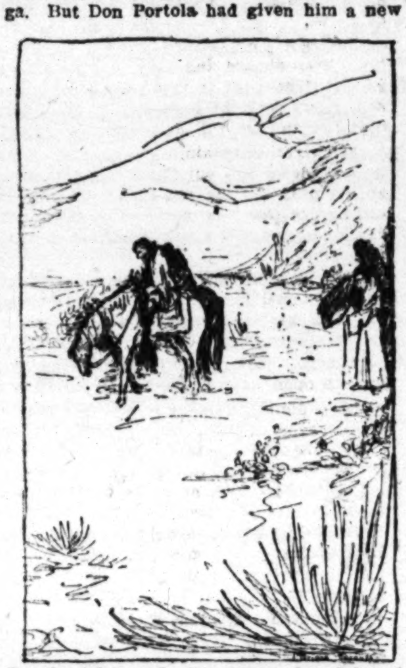
> Diary of Juan Crespi in Noticias de la Nueva California, escritas por el Rev. Padre Fr. Francisco Palou. v. 2, p. 240.

PASCUAL EL CAPITAN, chief of the tribes on the mesa and friend of the tribes in the valley, sat before his lodge in the open outer plaza of his Indian rancheria, arrayed in all the grandeur of clothing and ornaments which had been showered upon him by the great chief from Spain, the Governor, Don Gaspar de Portola. Pascual had been friendly to the Spaniards and they had been generous in return; but he had not demanded gifts. He had accepted them, and now proudly displayed their beauty, as evidence that the Spaniards returned the friendship he so truly had for them. Inwardly he felt no different, and his power of command over his people was no different than when he had been called Hahamovic, Chief of Hahamonga. But Don Portola had given him a new name. Father Crespi and Father Gomez had performed the solemn rights of baptism, and he was now Pascual el Capitan! He should no longer be ruler alone of his own happy and peaceful people, but should be Major Domo of all the great mission colony that Don Portola and Father Serra would soon establish to the memory and in honor of San Gabriel Arcangel!



Totally exhausted, they spent the night of January 16, 1770, at the base of the pass near where the San Fernando mission now stands.

Don Portola had remained only a day at the rancheria on the beautiful mesa.

"I must go forward in my search for Monterey!" he had exclaimed as he continued northward. "Adios! Pascual el Capitan! Before the shade is gone from under yon giant sycamores of the arroyo, I will return!"

Now the brown leaves carpeted the plaza before Pascual el Capitan and rustled in the breeze from the west; but neither Don Portola nor any of his men had yet returned. Had he found Monterey? Had he there established the second mission in Alta California, as Don Galvez had directed? These were the thoughts of Pascual el Capitan as he sat stolidly smoking in the plaza of his rancheria on a late December day of 1769. He knew that Don Portola and Father Serra had founded a mission among the tribes of the far south—at San Diego; but Pascual had no dealings with these. Like peoples at the coast line of his own valley, these men of the south lived on fish and clams and other deadly things of the sea. His Indians of the mesa hunted the deer and the bear. They lived on rabbits and squirrels. Birds, nuts and berries from the hills were better far than the strange things from the ocean. These tribes of the coast—the Pubugnas traveled far in their canoes—even to the great island which could be seen across the lowlands and beyond the brown San Pedro hills; and brought back meat of the seal and of the whale. But this was not food to Pascual el Capitan. He was of the inland and knew and loved the canyons and great peaks of the mountains that towered above his mesa. His father, too, had been chief of the Hahawongas; and had established their peaceful possession of all this central portion of the Southland.

Don Portola and his soldiers of a white race came not as strangers to Pascual el Capitan. His father's father had come from far beyond the great mountains; and from him, repeated by the seers of the tribe, there had come stories of white men far, far to the east—and long ago! Beyond the wall of mountains, beyond the wide reaches of the desert, and beyond the great and muddy river of the Colorado—in Pimeria Alta, his grandfather had seen the white men! Father Kino had founded a mission there on the Rio Gila among the Pima tribes—the Mission Santa Guevani. His grandfather had been but a boy—and Father Kino had lived, and worked, and died, before Father Serra, of whom Don Portola had devoutly spoken, was born. Bad days had come; the Apaches had swept down from the mountains. Now nothing but the names remained of Tubac and Tucson; of San Xavier, Sonoita, Tumacaori, Calabasas and Arivaca—all that had been great of Spain and of the Holy Church in Pimeria Alta was gone! His people had pressed westward to this valley of a peaceful God; and now Pascual el Capitan saw the return of the Spaniards in their efforts to establish missions—no longer in Pimeria Alta, but in Alta California!

Father Serra was with the tribes of the south; and with a scanty force was busy in the building of the Mission San Diego de Alcala. Rumors had come northward of the planting of new trees and vines—the orange, grape and olive. Also Pascual had come to know that a great landward expedition would soon pass through the country of his people; and, when he knew that Don Portola had started on his way his orders, sent to all the villages of the mesa, were for friendship and for good will to the Spaniards.

From his own father Pascual had learned of the one God—"the Giver of Life"—and neither he nor his people should be ones to take life unmindful of the rights of others or fearful for their own. His father's religion had known no devil and no hell; and he had taught his people to believe in a "happy hunting ground" of spiritual existence after death. Each of the Hahamonga villages had its place of worship, woven of basket work and circular in form. This lodge of ancient ceremonial was held sacred and none but the seers and captains of the tribe could enter. Religious dances, songs of victories won, and paeans of praise to their heroes of the past, made up their simple services; and Pascual's forefathers were ever remembered by these faithful tribes. Since Don Portola had gone northward, an ancient seer of the village, old Chipo, the oldest man baptized by Father Crespi, had died and by his last request the long, weird funeral ceremonial of the Hahamongas had been performed. His body had been burned upon a funeral pile, as was the custom, and his lodge with all his possessions of baskets and skins, of hunting spears and bows and arrows had been burned—they must go with him—he would need them in the life to come! Don Portola would miss him from the clan!

Another tribe had been won to friendship for the Spaniards, Pascual's only son had chosen a wife from the neighboring village of Acuragna. The granaries on the arroyo side of the inner plaza, beyond the lodge of Pascual el Capitan, were full of the autumn's gatherings of nuts and roots and herbs; of dried berries of the manzanita and holly and great conical baskets filled with the nourishing meal of the acorns. Supplies there were of pine nuts and of acorns still in the shell, ready to be ground for flour when needed. All was ready in the villages for the season of the winter rains, when the young men of the tribes ceased from their long trips in the mountains and prepared for the hunting season to come with the spring—the glad "Primavera" of the New Year fast approaching.

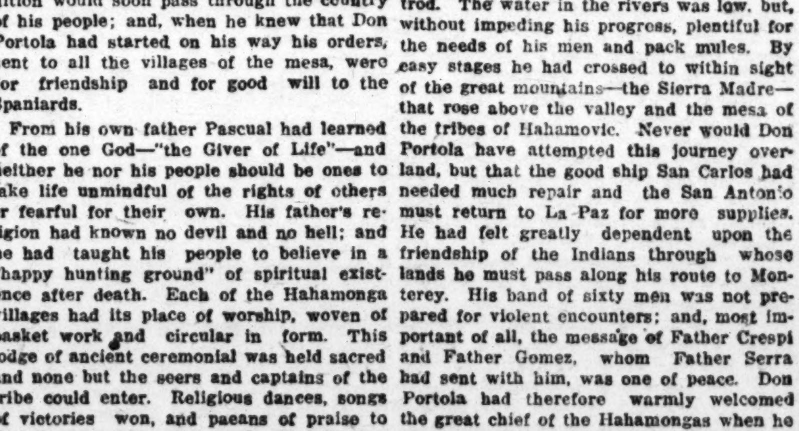
It had been midsummer when Don Portola said farewell to Father Serra as he left San Diego and started northward over the rolling foothills of the coast, through fields of flowering mustard and over poppy fields that foot of white man had never before trod. The water in the rivers was low, but, without impeding his progress, plentiful for the needs of his men and pack mules. By easy stages he had crossed to within sight of the great mountains—the Sierra Madre—that rose above the valley and the mesa of the tribes of Hahamovic. Never would Don Portola have attempted this journey overland, but that the good ship San Carlos had needed much repair and the San Antonio must return to La Paz for more supplies. He had felt greatly dependent upon the friendship of the Indians through whose lands he must pass along his route to Monterey. His band of sixty men was not prepared for violent encounters; and, most important of all, the message of Father Crespi and Father Gomez, whom Father Serra had sent with him, was one of peace. Don Portola had therefore warmly welcomed the great chief of the Hahamongas when he came forth to meet him at the Ford of the broken mesas, where the River Azucsagna, flowing from the great canyon in the high mountains, forced its way through the valley hills to the sea.



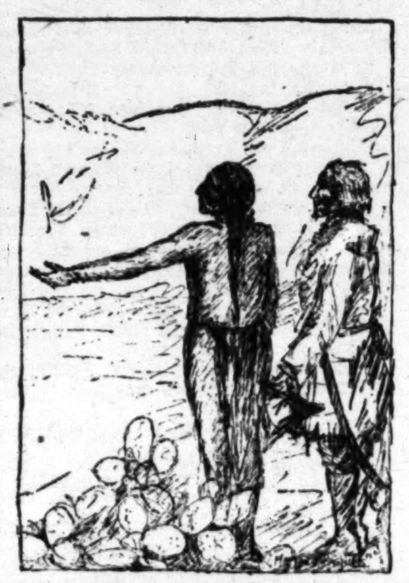
In the Spacious Plaza Under the Great Fair Oaks Was Set a New Year's Feast.

To Don Portola and his men the people of Pascual el Capitan had brought gifts of acorn bread, pine nuts and mountain berries—all new to the Spaniards, because the tribes by the sea had no knowledge of the mountains. Later, all this should be changed.

"The tribes of the north and the tribes of the south shall be one in their knowledge and worship of Our Lady of the Angeles!" Father Crespi had exclaimed as he blessed the Indians for their friendship and their gifts.

"Our work has but begun," replied Don Portola. "These friendly tribes of the Hahamonga shall prove a base and center of great things to come!"

Many were the presents of brightly colored clothing, of gauds and ornaments from Old Spain that were bestowed upon Pascual and his Indian captains as they led the way across the lush bottom lands of the Azucsagna to the mesa of the Hahamongas, which looked down upon another river winding westward to the sea—the Porciuncula. In the calendar of sacred days of the church this day of the Spaniards' coming was that of Saint Mary, Queen of the Angeles; and Father Crespi and Father Gomez, with fitting ceremonies, celebrated it in the open plaza before the lodge of worship at the rancheria of Pascual el Capitan. A name had been fixed for all time for the Indian village that was to become a great city—the city of "Nuestra Senora la Reina de Los Angeles."



Pascual el Capitan led Don Portola to the Safety of His Tribal Home.

Don Portola looked beyond the boundaries of the rancheria upon the broad upland of the mesa and was filled with joy at sight of the wonderful beauty of its golden carpet of poppies.

"La Sabanilla del Oro de San Pascual—the golden altar cloth of Holy Easter!" he exclaimed. "These highlands of the mesa shall be the lands of San Pascual; and you, Hahamovic, shall be Pascual el Capitan!"

Pascual had been baptized—the first Christian convert of the valley—and with him many of his tribesmen; and, these ceremonies ended, the tribal pipe of friendship had passed to all. The Spaniards had been fed from the ample stores of the Indians that they might not draw too heavily upon their own. Don Portola had questioned Pascual late into the night about the Indian tribes and about the mountains to the north and east. Pascual had told him much of the rivers and canyons, the great wide valleys and the miles of northern seacoast. Also, he had told him of the deserts and greater rivers and of the splendid wall of mountains to the east. The next day Don Portola pushed onward—little dreaming of the trials that would be his ere he should return with his half-famished men to this very rancheria.

Northward the star of Spanish empire in the New World had ever led; and northward went Don Portola and his men. The valiant Capt. Moncada; Pedro Fages, the scribe and future Governor; Costanso, the engineer, who must guide with compass and Sanitation vs. Medication.

IT IS announced that Dr. T. C. Lyster has left Los Angeles for Mexico to take charge of the most extensive campaign ever undertaken in Mexico for the eradication of yellow fever. As a director of the yellow fever branch of the international health board of the Rockefeller Foundation for Mexico, Central and South America, he will have behind him the resources of that powerful organization. In addition he will have the complete support and the direct co-operation of the Mexican government.

Gen. Gorgas has admitted that it was sanitary engineering, not medicine, that made the Panama Canal zone healthy. In other words, common cleanliness and abolition of malaria-producing swamps.

Clean up the swamps and filth that cause malaria, and the mosquitoes go also.

To do this requires, not "medical science," but men with shovels and scrapers, and brooms.

THERE seems to be no extreme to which prohibition fanatics will not go.

A bill drafted by a United States Senator would forbid all citizens who are abroad, and members of the American diplomatic and Consular service, to drink intoxicating liquors.

When you tramp through the rural sections of Italy, and ask for a drink at a wayside farmhouse, they do not think of offering you water, which they regard as unwholesome—as it often is. They bring you a dipper or a gourd filled with the light wine of the country, which is as cheap and wholesome as our "rot-gut" is dear and deadly.

WHEN we call our young men to war, nothing is too good for them, and we promise them everything. When they come back—after the grand reception—it is another story. A London correspondent, referring to Christmas Eve in the great city, says:

"It was estimated today that at least 1,000,000 people are without work. London's east end was looking sadly toward the luxury of the west end.

"Even the gay throngs in Piccadilly could not escape the haunting look of women who sang for pennies by the curb, or of former army officers in war-stained, tattered uniforms, who ground out music from hurdy-gurdies, while they watched through the slits of the masks they wore, to hide their identity."

Garden Cities.

ONCE more I emphasize the fact that the solution of our social troubles lies in facilitating the ownership of small productive tracts of land by those who are able and willing to cultivate them and by decentralizing the factories. In an address delivered by George H. Maxwell before the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce, he said:

"The world over, industry is destroying humanity, under the present system of industry and life in industrial communities. Slowly but surely it is degenerating humanity and setting in motion the forces of human deterioration that have eventually destroyed every civilization that has ever existed in the history of the world. The only difference is that those forces of destruction are at work undermining our civilization much faster than they have ever worked in any previous period of history.

"Deep down under everything else lies the solution, and there is only that one solution, and that is to decentralize industry, scatter the jobs and the factories so that every wage-earner can have a home of his own, with at least a quarter of an acre of ground, a lot of say 50x200, on which a scientifically trained family can produce practically all the food for the family from their own garden and poultry yard, with the family labor."

CARL RUDOLPH LEGIEN, president of the German Federation of Trades Unions and Socialist member of the Reichstag, died recently. He was 60 years of age. He had been a member of the German Parliament since 1893. He was convinced that much of the labor radicalism in Germany since the revolution can be traced to the food situation. He believed that once the German workingmen recovered from the fatless years he would recover his old-time love for work, law and order. He once said that if Munich beer had contained real hops and malt there would have been no Bavarian Soviet Republic.

There are certain technical "foot-facts" that are very hard to explain without a comparison of "standard" (old-style) lasts with the modern (Cantilever) last. Of construction, too.

We should like, for example, by such a demonstration, to show you just how and why the flexible shank of the Cantilever eases the arch and prevents it from falling.

Also we should like you to see how much beauty there is in the straighter-inner-line of Cantilever, with just enough curve for proper contour without binding or crowding the sensitive foot.

And these are just two points out of many. Call and ask us about the rest.

The Watch-Horn--A Name to Juggle With.

BY THE OLD CAPTAIN.

YOU know Point Fermin; you can see it in your mind's eye, how the solid rock juts out to meet the everlasting roll of the great surf that has been beating against it for years and years?

It is a great fight that is going on there between the sea and the rocks, but the old unbeatable sea is getting the best of the fight, and once in a while it grabs off a great chunk of rock, and it comes crashing down; the sea gathers it in, plays with it, and decorates it with garlands of beautiful seaweed that whips in the surf, and sometimes when the old sea gets mad and very rude, the long strings of seaweed "snap in like a whiplash."

But the sea finds easier foes to conquer; it's the soft earth on each side of that horny rock, and on the harbor side it has eaten greedily of the soft earth and cut in deep-way back a full mile, in a great concaved arc, leaving high banks, perhaps just to show what it could do if it wanted to.

The lowlands in this great arc are called "the Miner Fill," and when the city took charge and began to lay out the wharves, warehouses and basins in this section, there was one little patch shaped somewhat like the ace of diamonds with one straight side left out. It has been piled and rocked on the other three sides, but never wharfed, and inside there is thirty feet of water, and room for six large lumber schooners to dock at the same time to discharge their cargoes; it now contains but one vessel, a United States government barge with cabin, named Disinfector. And this basin in which it lies is the "Watch Horn."

If you go down there some day and look it over, you will say, 'Fine! Some day it's going to be a right busy little spot right here in the Watch Horn."

Just beyond this basin is the Yacht Club moorings, where the White and Gold, Slender Stickers, bow and courtesy with their heads all pointing south by west the whole summer long, as graceful as a princess is supposed to.

Then there came a day when there was a yacht race, and as the white-winged beauties came rambling home there was one more yacht came in than went out.

She was a big, powerful yawl rigged craft, and instead of going on to mooring grounds, she jibed, spread her sails wide and made for the entrance of the Watch Horn basin, and went in a flying.

It was magnificently done, and the way that she came about on her heel and pointed in the wind with everything a slatting showed that a master mariner was at the tiller; and when her headway was checked, her anchor dropped with a rattle of chain through the hawse pipe, and then—but wait, I have to go back, to tell you the rest, as the skinny old guy told it to me.

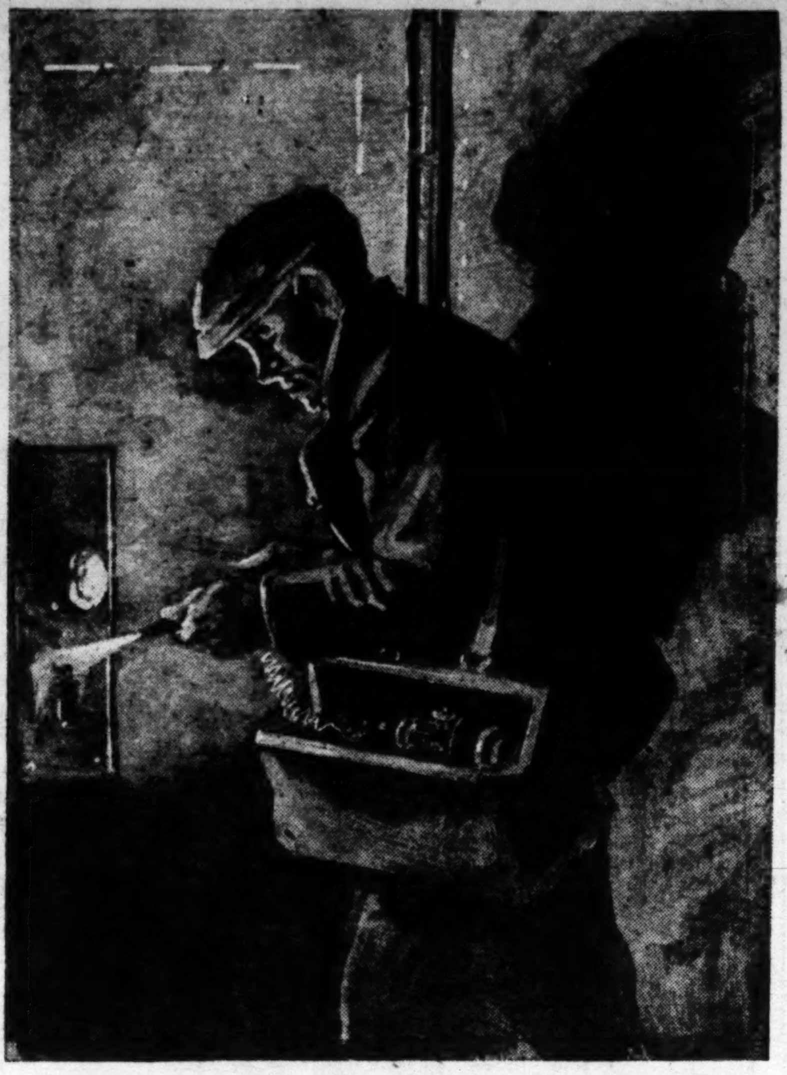
Jimmy Dunn was a thief, and a fine one, too; that means that he was an expert of experts. He had invented a "cutting burner" that shot its tiny stream of fire so effectively that nothing could withstand it, and it was compact enough as to be carried in a common grip.

Jimmy and his wife, who was also his pal, had been in San Diego for a month and were at the Tia Juana races, and gambling joints every day, but they never gambled; they were there for a sure thing and were laying their plans to make a clean-up that would put them on Easy street for the rest of their days. Little hauls were not considered.

They had watched the methods of the gamblers after a successful clean-up, what they did with the large rolls of bills, and noted that they nearly all patronize the Mariners' Bank, which accommodatingly kept open in the evening for them, until 7:30 p.m.

It was the day of the big race, the best horses in the whole country were entered, and a crowd of big gamblers from the East were there to make a "killing." It was a great day, and fortunes were lost—and won; and an ocean of money was passed through the wicket of the Mariners' Bank, huge bundles of large denominations, with rubber bands about them, and wrapped in newspaper coverings were carried about in under the arm, like a loaf of bread. Money was very cheap that day.

Two days before Jimmy and his wife were down along the water front, admiring the speed boats that were for hire, and the Archer and its captain seemed to take their eye, and they engaged it for a spin up the bay, and after they were well away Jimmy said to the old captain, "Shut her down for a while, and let us just drift. I want to talk to you."



"Soon There Came a Quiet Little 'Hiss' Like a Snake Gives When Disturbed."

"Sure, but the time goes on just the same," said the captain.

"Of course," said Jimmy. "What is your name, captain?"

"William J. Archer, sir."

"Is the Archer a good sea boat, captain?"

"Yes, sir, for anything ordinary."

"The reason I ask is, I am expecting my yacht most any time now, and when I get a wireless from her, I want to run up and meet her as soon as possible, myself and wife, you know. Our children are aboard, and we may want to go in a hurry, and if I hear from her in the night can I find you at the landing?"

"Yes, sir, I sleep aboard; you can always get me instantly."

"Shall we engage him, Jennie?" asked Jimmy of his wife.

"Certainly. We can surely depend on you, Capt. Archer? It is very important that we should meet the yacht as quickly as possible when we hear where she is, and you will be certain to have your boat in first-class condition, for a long, hard run if need be, won't you? And would $100 help any to make you more certain, captain?"

"When do you expect to hear from the yacht, ma'am?"

"The day after tomorrow, between midnight and morning."

"Ma'am, you can depend on me, absolutely," said Capt. Archer.

"Had we better pay him $25 now, as a sort of retainer, Jimmy?" said his wife.

"By all means, yes," and Jimmy put the money in the captain's hand. "Well, let's go back; you may hear from us suddenly, captain; be sure to have plenty of gas."

"You can depend on me, sir."

Just after midnight of the day of the great races, two persons, each with a grip, made their way jauntily down the street, past the Mariners' Bank, which was dark, with the exception of the watchman's light (the bank was in the middle of the block.) These two persons turned the corner beyond, and passed down the side street to the alley, and when nearing it one looked back and the other looked forward, and seeing no one, they dodged in the alley. An auto truck was lying in an offset of the brick wall of the buildings; the two quickly took advantage of this shield. Of course it was Jimmy Dunn and his wife.

After a few minutes of moveless quietness, Jimmy said: "Jen, you watch the ends of the alley while I get ready, and if you suspect anything of 'butters-in' don't hesitate, but take care of them instantly. Keep your eyes open, honey, while I get ready,"

"All right, my boy, go ahead. I'll take care of this end," said Jennie, confidently.

Jimmy worked with his grip for a minute or two, then pulled his felts from his pocket and slipped them on, and taking the grip he stepped over to the barred door; soon there came a quiet little "hiss," like a snake gives when disturbed, and a tiny thread of light was seen for an instant, and the bolt and latch of the lock was burned off nearly as quick as you could count ten. The door swung open softly and Jimmy entered. This door was only the opening to the entry, where brooms, mops and buckets were kept, but the next door opened directly into the bank.

This lock, as before, was quickly burned out, and the door was carefully opened.

The watchman was busy with his janitor work, and was down on his knees polishing the legs of a table in the corner of the room, when a touch from the toe of Jimmy's "felt" caused him to look hastily over his shoulder. He sprang to his feet, reached for his gun, but too late, a little thread of fire shot out, and struck the watchman fair in that little hollow of the throat just below the Adam's apple, and he crumpled in a heap on the floor.

Then Jimmy began to get busy in earnest. The door of the old-fashioned safe was tackled, and that thread of flame began to eat through the Harveyized steel in a circle, and the steel ran down like molasses, in less than five minutes, the chunk in the center lopped over and the inside of the safe was in view. The flashlight that Jimmy thrust through the opening showed the bundles of bills, still wrapped in their newspaper coverings. There were so many bundles that they were piled closely outside of the inner compartment.

Jimmy quickly took them out, tore off the tags, tore a hole in the cover to make certain that it was money and laid them in heaps on the floor, then stepped to the door and called Jen.

Jen came with her grip and that was stowed jam full.

"Shall I tap the inside one, Jen?"

"I believe not, boy, it's hardly worth while; we have enough here, and it's all gambler money, that which is inside is mostly valuable papers of regular patrons, and say we let it stay, we can be magnanimous for once in our life, don't you think so, boy?"

"Those are my sentiments exactly Come, honey girl, let's go. I'm sorry for the watchman, but there was no other way."

They found the Archer and as was agreed, a slight call brought the old captain on deck.

"You got your wireless, I see?" he said. "Just step aboard and we will get away directly. The boat is in fine shape, so just say where to head for to meet that yacht of yours and we will be off."

"All right, captain, you just pull out quietly, down and out the entrance, and by that time I will be ready to give you the destination. As it is on paper we will go in the cabin and figure it out, but head up the coast."

"Aye, sir, up the coast, the man says," and the captain cast off, pushed the button and the hum of the motor sang sweetly as they glided smoothly and quietly down around the bend, out along the breakwater to the open sea.

Then Jimmy came out and sat by the captain, and said: "Do you know the Island of San Clemente?"

"I do, sir; I know it well. It is sixty miles, three points north of west, and can make it in four hours. It may be the yacht is lying in the cove on the east side, as that is the only good anchorage about there. Am I right, sir?"

"You are, captain, and if you keep your word as you have just told me, there will be a bonus coming to you when you put us alongside the White Swan. Now we will have a little sleep and leave you alone to manipulate. Call us when in sight of the yacht. Good night."

At daylight the captain called them, as a yacht was in view, and to come up and identify her.

Jimmy and his wife came tumbling up with their glasses in their hands, and immediately pronounced it the White Swan. Jennie turned smilingly to the captain, saying, "Captain, you are positively all right, and we appreciate your skill, knowledge and trustworthiness, as you shall see."

"Thank you, lady; but get your dunnage ready, as I will not stop but a minute, just see you safely aboard, then off again."

In half an hour they were alongside, and two happy kid faces were hanging over the bulwarks, shouting, "Papa, Mamma," and Jimmy and his wife were aboard and hugging the kids in no time.

Then Jimmy reached down and handed the captain two of the gamblers' $100 bills, thanked him again for his services and the Archer was off.

And here came Big Pete from for'ard and shook hands. "We are all ready, sir, the minute you give the word," said Pete.

"All right, old faithful, let's go, head for San Pedro, and 'crack on' as wild as you wish."

"Aye, sir, crack on, the man says; crack on it is," and Jimmy off with his coat, and Jennie, after kissing the kids, was at the wheel, and gave orders, as the captain should.

"Clear that anchor from the ground;" the winch spun, and the anchor came up.

"I'll tend winch; Pete, up jib, sheet home. That's good; both back and house that mizzen. Be alive now. Fine, make ready the mains'l," and as the White Swan swung her head to the open, "Up mains'l, and come a-running with it. Hard on the throat. Hard, I said. Fine, belay. Now that peak; up, up, up, till she wrinkles. Belay. Sheet home," and the beautiful White Swan heeled and the white water gathered rail high on the lee quarter as the great mains'l bellied.

"Jim, take the wheel. Pete, trim the sails when on the course, as only our good,

CARE OF THE BODY.

CONDUCTED BY HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N. D.

Raw Food.

FOLLOWING is a press dispatch from Paris:

"'If one lived on cooked food alone he would die within a year,' stated Prof. Lumiere of the Academy of Sciences Wednesday night, reporting the result of experiments.

"Prof. Lumiere has concluded from his researches that the most healthful diet consists of raw vegetables, grain and fruits, asserting that cooking is the root of all diseases, since it destroys the vitamines, thus inducing inanition."

This may be new to "medical science" but it is nothing new to those who have studied the building of the body by food.

I mentioned recently an epidemic of scurvy among children in a Vienna hospital, which was traced to the double cooking of vegetables, whereby the life elements were desroyed. The same results follow exclusive feeding of sterilized or pasteurized milk, unless raw green stuff is added.

Cooking is a comparatively recent innovation in the history of the human race. When man, forced through some climatic cataclysm, or otherwise, strayed from his original diet of fruit and nuts and discovered the use of fire, he gradually introduced cooking.

There is much to be said in favor of the raw food theory. To a great extent cooking spoils food, from a health point of view. In cooking, the organic salts are largely deorganized and changed into the inorganic form, in which form they cannot be used by the body, but are cast forth as intruders, like drugs. When vegetables are cooked and the water discarded, three-fourths of the most valuable qualities are lost. Then instinct calls for the lacking salts, and two or three times as much food is eaten as is necessary, laying the foundation of ill health, and causing an enormous waste of food. It is a fact that four ounces of raw food, eaten slowly, satisfies and nourishes more than half a pound of cooked food, swallowed in the usual way.

Certain foods may properly be eaten raw—fruits, fresh and dried, salad plants and some vegetables, as radishes, young carrots and young turnips, also green corn, to which you may, if you please, add in moderation, the semianimal foods, cottage cheese and eggs.

The eating of raw cereals, preached by raw-food enthusiasts, is harmful to all except those who do hard manual labor, and have strong digestions. Many have been injured in this way. Ripe cereals should be dextrinized by dry heat.

A man named Drews wrote a book on the raw-food diet, of which he makes a kind of religion, giving it the crack-jaw name Apyrtrophy and he calls salads "synedes." He gave a raw-food banquet in Chicago at which he boasted that over fifty kinds of food were served—all disguised, mixed and mussed up. This is a step backward, instead of forward, and involves much more labor on the housewife than preparing a simple meal of meat and greens.

I recently received from Drews an announcement of the first annual convention of the Apyrtropher Society, to be held in Chicago on January 20, "on the birthday of the founder of the Aquarian Age."

I advise all my consultants to make at least one of their daily meals of raw foods, especially raw green stuff, rich in the organic salts. For instance, fruit and nuts, or salad and cottage cheese, or peanut butter little roasted. Ordinary peanut butter is cooked too much, freeing fat acids that irritate the lining of the stomach.

Following is from a little book by Stella McDermott, entitled, "Metaphysics of Raw Food:"

"I saw the physical cause of my failing health. It was too much alcohol—gotten through eating too much bread, sugar, sweet foods, etc. I did some hard thinking. I resolved that as I had been instrumental in taking alcohol away from others, because it was a stumbling block to many, I would remove the stumbling block of alcohol-producing foods from my own life, and as much as possible from the lives of others. I changed my foods that day from the unnatural to the natural. I removed from my life a lot of difficulty as well—the dizziness, gas pressure and catarrh that had stood in the way of my mind expressing its ideals and power. The change in health was nothing short of marvelous. Today I am an unusually healthy woman. Nothing can ever persuade me back into the old way of living."

Mrs. McDermott refers to the early experience of those who adopt a raw-food diet. She says:

"Another reason for the 'empty feeling' is that man is in the habit of eating until he feels 'full' and the stomach misses the usual crowding. After a little patience and perseverance it will soon adjust itself to the new order."

Married Sixty Years.

ON DECEMBER 27 J. G. Wright and wife of 2001 Francisco Street, Berkeley, Cal., celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary. This is refreshing amid so many lightning change divorces.

Mr. Wright, who is an old correspondent of mine, is 84 years of age. He is youthful in mind and body, an earnest student of the care of the body, a strenuous opponent of harmful medical practices, and lives in accordance with the laws of health. In sending me an invitation to the anniversary, he wrote:

"I get so much pleasure in reading the Care of the Body that I felt I must write a line or two of thanks. I thank you very much. You are doing a grand work in exposing the absurdities of so-called medical science. I fear you are reaping the usual dole. I marvel at why it should be so, but so it is, and you have no doubt felt at times discouraged. Horace Greeley, in summing up the life of the reformers, says: 'After all is said and done, is there any other work so good?' I think he was right in his conclusion."

Yeast.

ONE of the latest medical fads is yeast. Yeast produces fermentation and gas. Gas pressure from fermenting food is one of the leading causes of disease, and the main cause of high blood pressure.

Yeast is supposed to furnish "vitamines." Vitamines are enzymes. You can get all the "vitamines" you need from natural food, especially raw green stuff.

Dr. William H. Porter, professor emeritus pathology and clinical medical adviser of the New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital, says that in all his experience he has never seen a case successfully treated by yeast, although he has seen many cases in which such treatment proved a decided detriment.

One patient who had taken the treatment for three months became progressively worse, developing faulty assimilation and malmetabolism—as evidenced by the urinary index. He rapidly became weaker and more emaciated, and finally had to give up his business and put himself under medical treatment. After the yeast was discontinued, he just as rapidly gained ground, and is now as well as ever—and incidentally has foresworn yeast for life.

Another case of chronic furunculosis—or boils—took two or three yeast cakes daily for six months or more, getting worse all the time. This man's physical condition became quite alarming—finally resolving itself into a well-developed case of diabetes, with a fairly high percentage of sugar in the urine. After discontinuing the yeast and taking appropriate treatment for a number of months, this man is completely recovered, and is now the picture of health.

Another patient developed a most obstinate diarrhoea, with uncomfortable fermentation and gas disturbances, which finally culminated in intestinal catarrh, and the passing of large quantities of mucus. The intense gas pains manifested themselves after the second day, and persisted during the entire time she was taking the "cure." Three days after discontinuing her attempts to become beautiful, her condition commenced to clear up, and within a few weeks she was well again.

Osteopathy.

THE osteopaths have been currying favor with the "regulars" and adopting many of their harmful and unnatural methods, but it has availed them naught. It has hurt, rather than helped them. They have lost the confidence of the public, and are snubbed by the allopaths. Following is from a sermon by Rev. William E. Clark of Memphis:

"The managers of the Baptist Memorial Hospital are 'ministers of God,' not representatives of a certain kind of doctors who prescribe drugs. That institution was built with money that was contributed by the good people of this and adjoining States who thought they were helping to erect an institution where the sick might find a place to lay their suffering bodies. They did not think they were helping to build a place where only one kind of doctors could prescribe the drugs peculiar to its school.

"The point we are interested in is that the hospitals that have been built with the people's money were built for the suffering to have a place to lay their heads. And the men who manage them are, in fact, ministers of God. They are there to serve their fellow-men, not to serve as the special agents of certain kinds of drugs, and I am of the opinion that if they were conscious of their ministry they would not have driven the osteopath and his patient out of the bed that was provided by some good man or woman who acted consciously as a 'minister of God' by helping to build that home for the sick."

Appendicitis.

FOLLOWING is by Bernarr McFadden, in Physical Culture:

"It has recently been announced in the public press, that a renowned physician has discovered a serum for appendicitis. No more surgery will be required. You merely inject an antigangrenous serum, and the job is done.

"You are cured!

"No need of cleaning out the foul, hardened, impacted contents of the bowel in the region of the appendix, when the use of this serum becomes universal.

"Whenever I hear of an operation for appendicitis, it makes my blood boil with indignation. Maybe the serum treatment will be an improvement.

"But why not cure the disease by removing the cause? Why do some medical authorities absolutely ignore the cause? I met a physician many years ago who has cured nearly a hundred cases of appendicitis, without a single death to mar his record, and in nearly every instance the patient returned to his ordinary duties of life in from two to five days thereafter.

"His method of cure was amazingly simple. He first of all cleansed out the colon throughout its entire length, of the accumulated contents. He then inserted a rectal tube a sufficient distance in the colon, to get as near as possible to the appendix, and through this tube he injected about a teacupful of oil. Thus, right at the seat of the difficulty, he furnished a lubricant that would in nearly all cases bring quick results.

"Why is a serum necessary, when a method so simple can be adopted? And one may also ask, 'Why is an operation necessary?'

"Thousands of people have passed to the Great Beyond because of the prevailing procedure in the treatment of appendicitis. When suffering from a disease of this sort, the pain often becomes agonizing. You twist and contort, obeying the demands of your instincts. Nature is trying to dislodge the obstruction, whatever it may be. The doctor is hurriedly called. You demand relief. He often gives it to you in the form of morphine, which frequently paralyzes the entire alimentary canal.

"And it is the deadening influence of this pernicious drug that often makes an operation necessary. The contents of the bowels lie dormant within their folds. Some physicians are so criminally negligent in cases of this kind, that they do not even cleanse the lower bowel with an enema. It is this abominable treatment that brings

Three Sheets in the Wind--A Sea Tale.

BY MORGAN ROBERTSON.

THE most convincing lecture or lesson on morals is the one delivered by an immoral, or unmoral, person. I learned this in early life, when, with a crowd of other youngsters, I was trying to drown a half-grown puppy. We would have succeeded; but, along came a tramp—a ragged, dirty, black-bearded derelict—who watched us a moment, then gave utterance to a villainous flood of billingsgate. I cannot write down the names he called us, nor the adjectives with which he qualified the names; but his concluding speech, expurgated, ran something like this: "Any man or boy, who will ill-treat a dumb and defenseless animal that can't talk back and explain matters, is mean, that's all—just mean. He's mean enough to steal the cross off the donkey's back."

Then, still storming at us, he reeled on his way, while we rescued the half-dead creature and nursed it back to life. Later, we found it a home, and began an unorganized, unofficial humane society. We lied, stole, tickled the devil and played truant as before, but were a menace to other boys who, with the savagery of children, found pleasure in cruelty. The tramp's anger and disgust had done more for us than the behests of father, mother, or Sunday-school teacher.

With pity for dumb brutes my one moral quality, I grew up and went to sea, where morals are not taught—where nothing is taught or acquired but seamanship, navigation and iron-clad stamina and endurance. These attributes came to me in time, as well as a mate's certificate; but in all else I remained at a standstill or backwards. Sailors are children, it is said, and like all sailors, even when I berthed aft, I grumbled, quarreled, swore, and drank, with no restraining or principle to curb me until—I—received my second lesson in morals—or ethics, if you like—and this time from a man I despised. Afterward I received other tutelage, and finally became the civilized commander of a passenger steamship; but my later development has no place in this story, which is concerned only with that second lecture and the events which followed—events that made me a teetotaler for life.

This lecture came from Bill Edwards, who, as second mate of my ship, had kicked me off the poop and hazed me for the whole voyage because I had dared raise my voice in boyish protest at his "sprit-sail-yarding" of a shark that he caught with a line pulled aboard. I lacked the vocabulary and the superiority in size and strength possessed by the mate, so my protest was ignored, and the shark alive and uninjured, went overboard with a small spar lashed athwart its mouth, to die of starvation. Later, however, having attained my growth, strength and chest measurement, I met Edwards in a Rangoon boarding-house, and thrashed him within an inch of his life. Then we had gone our separate ways—he to the hospital, I to jail—not to meet again until Frisco Frank, a Honolulu boarding master, having taken my last cent for bed, board and bar, turned me out without a ship in port to sign on. It was then, sitting on a stringpiece of the wharf at the water while I nursed an aching head, that Edwards approached from behind me and, stooping over my shoulder, peered into my face.

"It's you, Jack," he said, not unkindly. "Heard you were in port; but what's the matter? Lost your mother?"

"On the beach," I answered bitterly. I did not welcome his presence, but in my extremity I would have talked with a coolie. "Fired out when I'd blown my last cent; and his bill was big enough to give him an excuse to hold my clothes."

"Frisco Frank, hey! He can't hold a sailor's clothes. Don't you know that?"

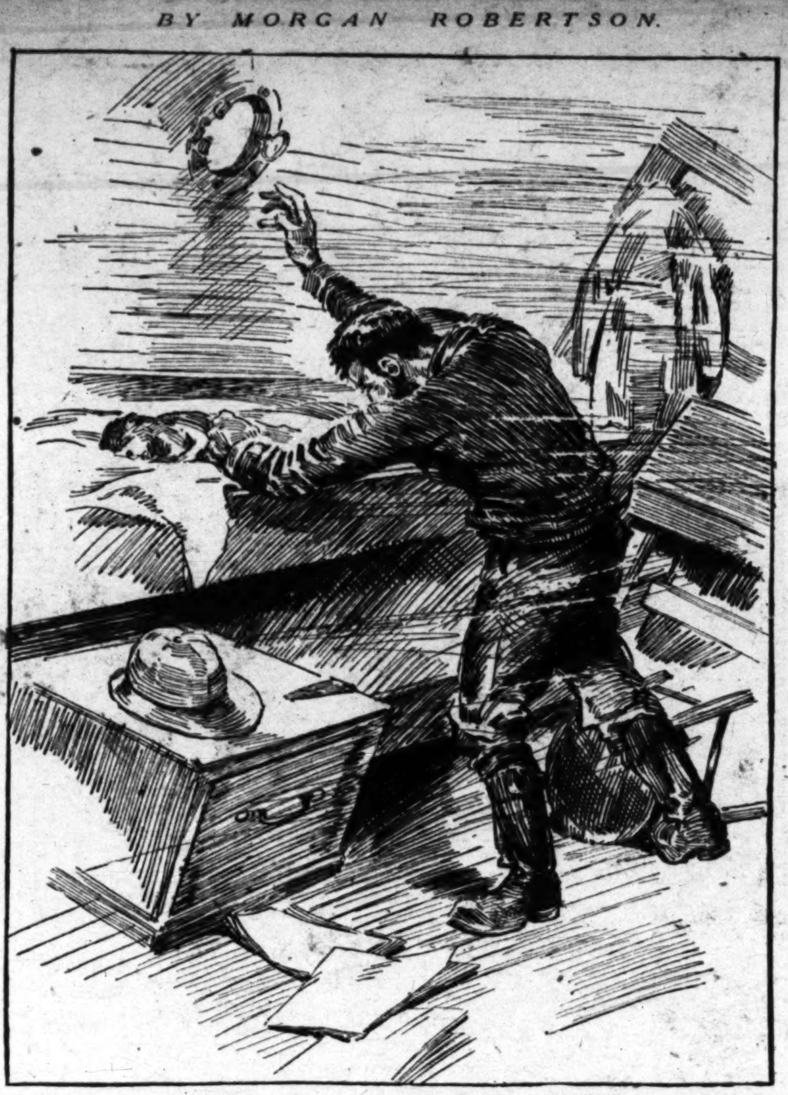
"Yes, but I don't care to fall back on sailor's rights. I've had paper too long," I sneered ill-naturedly.

"You came in first mate of the Century, I heard. Discharged?"

"Quit, if it's any of your business," I answered, savagely. "Didn't like her."

"Oh, don't get wrathy! I'm not looking for a scrap, for I know you can lick me. But I'm older than you, and never held any grudge. I feel like telling you something. You didn't quit that big ship because you didn't like her. You had a good berth, a good skipper, and good prospects. What you quit for was a run ashore, and a big drunk. You've had them, and now you're paying."

"You're a fine preacher—," I rejoined.



I Staggered to Open the Dead Light Over My Berth.

"I'm not preaching—that is, about right and wrong. It's the damnfoolishness of it. I've been called all kinds of a scoundrel; but no man ever called me a fool, even though I can just write my name and can't read it in print. No man ever saw me drunk. In all my life I never spent as much as a dollar over the bar. I know the taste of the stuff and dont like it. Do you like it?"

"No," I answered, dubiously. "Can't say that I do. It's the stimulation I like."

"Dutch courage, that lasts about fifteen minutes, then needs replenishing. Then you're sleepy or quarrelsome, according to your liver—in either case in danger of robbery or arrest. Who benefits, anyway? The men behind the bar, but they don't drink. Did you ever see a bartender or saloon-keeper drunk?"

"Ive seen them drink," I replied doggedly.

"Yes, for sociability or business, and then the smallest drink possible. It's the damn fool in front of the bar that takes all they can decently get into a glass, and then some more. And think of the cost at the end of the year. Why, the price of one drink will buy three loaves of bread, and three loaves of bread will keep a big man alive three days. That's the foolishness of it. Poverty all over the world and saloon keepers getting rich. Frisco Frank has his house and horses. Where's yours?"

"Oh, shut up! I've got what he hasn't got"

"An education and a mate's license. What does he want of them? I tell you if it wasn't for the bar, boarding masters would go out of business and Fo' Castle Jack could ship where he likes on his own terms. If all men could swear off, saloon-keepers, bartenders, and every man connected with making or selling the stuff would take to the ground and grow something that could be eaten. As it is, more grain goes into making of booze than of bread. Dead broke?"

I nodded.

"I'm not, even though I never had your chance, not having any schooling. I never signed above second mate, because I couldn't learn navigation. But I've jumped above first mate and skipper. I'm owner—I employ skippers and mates." I looked at him with surprise. He certainly was well dressed.

"I've made money," he went on. "Never mind how. I've made it, and taken a Chinese partner with me. We bought a schooner from the underwriters, patched her up, and mean to make some more money with her. She's up at the Carriage Drive. I go out skipper, for I can handle her; but I want a licensed sailing master with papers to satisfy the law. You've got'm. Want the berth?"

"Want a drink more than anything else," I answered abandonedly.

"You want your breakfast more than anything else, I take it. But if you'll ship with me I'll buy you a drink of Frisco's grog to steady you, and get your clothes, but there'll be no advance. We can board just in time for dinner, which will be breakfast for you. I'll give you another bracer at 5 o'clock and that will end it. We sail to Yokohama in ballast for a cargo to Frisco. And remember, in port I am managing owner and you are skipper: but at sea I'm skipper and you're mate. You are to navigate, keep the log correctly, and oversee the accounts and ship's papers. What do you say?"

"I'll go you," I said, rising. "Any port in a storm?"

"You mean any ship in a port, I guess; but that's the way you make it come on."

I was given a drink over Frisco Frank's bar and after a few sharp words between Frank and Edwards, my chest was returned to me. Then we rode up to the wharf and boarded the schooner.

She had been a yacht; but her long, overhanging, sharp lines, lofty spars and flush deck were the only yacht-like characteristics left of her. Her original cabins, dinner rooms and staterooms below had given way to cargo space, and all skylights and companions had been eliminated or turned into hatches—all but two of the latters. A companion just abaft the windlass led to a triangle forecast in the bows containing bunks for five and a stove for cooking, and another, just forward of the wheel, led to an equally diminutive cabin that was nothing but a hall space at the foot of the stairs with a room on each side—one for the skipper, the other for the mate. There was also a feature in this craft that I had never seen in another. She was piped for gas lighting; each room in the cabin, the forecastle, binnacle, and even fixed sides and masthead lamps contained a wire enclosed burner, fed by a tank of compressed gas under the cabin floor.

"It seemed to work all right," explained Edwards, "so I had left it rather than spend $50 for an outfit of lamps and oil. And, then, there are Pintsch gas buoys everywhere. We can always recharge the tank."

This, and his refusal of an advance, were not the only evidences of Edward's shortage fund. The dinner he sat me down to was boiled rice and weak tea—the same as he fed his five coolies forward—and when he took me ashore in the afternoon to act as sailing master in getting out ship's papers he would "clear" at the customhouse. With the schooner's rotten condition in mind I thought at the time that he also ought to insure our lives, but did not say so; he might have repeated his paraphrase: "Any ship in a storm."

I did not see the Chinese partner, nor did I see any more of Edwards until, having put up a dreary afternoon, he came aboard promptly at 5 and gave me the bracer which I sadly needed.

At supper, which we ate on a small folding table in the hall space between our rooms, which included, with the rice and tea, trepang, or dried fish, a huge, half-starved cat bounded down the stairs and into my berth, where, like all cats in strange places, it voiced its distress in loud yowls.

"Drive that brute ashore," he said angrily.

"Sanctuary," I answered calmly. "I'll feed it first."

"You'll do nothing of the kind. I want no cats on board. They're bad luck."

"I've always found them good luck. Strange cats come to me. and I always treat them well."

I picked up my half-eaten supper and turned to my door.

"Do you want your berth here?" asked Edwards, rising to his feet.

"Yes," I answered, facing him with the plate in my hand.

"Then you do as I say," he said. "Drive that beast away."

"Are you ready to hand over a month's pay?"

"What? For half a day's work?"

"I'm on the article as sailing maste.. You've got the papers, but you'll have to produce them on demand. Ask the Consul, Mr. Edwards."

"Capt. Edwards," he spluttered.

"Mister Edwards," I replied, emphasizing the prefix. "I'm captain here, and until you pay me off, either now or at Yokohama, your rights stop where mine begin. I'm going to feed the poor cat."

He stared blankly at me, and I entered my room with the food. A few soft words and gentle strokes quieted the frightened animal, and it greedily at my supper, then purred so gratefully that I didn't have the heart to put him ashore, so leaving it stretched out in my berth I went out. Having conquered Edwards I felt no anger for myself, so going up to him, asked him when we would sail.

"We tow down the first thing in the morning," he answered, much more civil than I expected.

"I'm telling you that," he added, "because you have a right to know. But as you claim other rights that I'm not sure of, I fall back on rights of my own that I'm sure of. Don't speak to me except about work while you are in this packet. I want none o' your conversation."

"Very well, Mr. Edwards," I answered. "But I expect the same from you."

Then, as darkness was closing down, I went forward, lighted the port, or shore, side light, as a warning to passing craft, inspected the mooring lines, set the night watch, and came aft in a mood to fight Edwards, but he had gone down into his berth.

In the morning I left the cat in the closet room, until, after a silent breakfast with Edwards, I ostentatiously fed it, then, after the tug had taken us clear of the dock, I released it for a run on deck, at the same time warning the coolie crew that if they troubled it harm would come to them. I warned the Chinamen, because they were like babies, and I never could remember their names five minutes. I said nothing to by stars when all routes failed; Ortega and the Franciscan Fathers, Crespi and Gomez—all were buoyant at the thought of the rediscovery of Monterey, and the founding there, to the glory of God and to His Majesty, the King of Spain, of the second mission of Alta California.

"Viva Cabrillo! Viva Viscaino! Viva Gaspar, Compt de Monterey!" were the shouts of the soldiers and the muleteers as they journeyed through the canyons, over mountains, and across the plains that separated them from their goal. Their songs had resounded through the defiles of the Sierra Madre:

> "Cuando los matadores
> Se matan en la Corrida,
> Alla vendran bonitas
> Ver matar o vivir.
> Ta-ra-la-la-la!
>
> (When the brave matadors
> Strive in the contest high.
> Trooping come the pretty girls
> To see them fight or die!
> Ta-ra-la-la-la!)
>
> Me gustan todas,
> Me gustan todas!
> Ta-ra-la-la,
> Ta-ra-la-la!
>
> (I love them all,
> I love them all!
> Ta-ra-la-la,
> Ta-ra-la-la,
> Ta-ra-la-la-la!)

Thus had they gone from the happy land of Pascual el Capitan.

Six long months had passed and no word had come back to Pascual el Capitan. Guides of his tribe had led Don Portola past the villages of the Cabuenga and on through the first mountain passes; beyond the village of the Huenemes, and to the greatest pass of all—the Tah-ee-chay-pah—from which Don Portola could see his route for leagues ahead and the guides had then returned.

It was now mid-January, 1770. Pascual el Capitan had again put on the velvet jacket and breeches trimmed with gold—gifts from Don Portola, and sat, admired of all his tribe, before his lodge. The first winter rains had fallen and a quiet beauty had settled down over mesa and valley. The leaves of the giant sycamores in the arroyo below had turned a golden brown, and been scattered far by the winds from the north.

The rains had washed the summer's dust from the live oaks—the "haha" trees—which had given their name to these tribes of the mesa. The grasses on the hills were brown, but there was a freshness and fairness to all nature such as Pascual thought he had not known before. The quail had come down from the mountains and now nested each night in the willows and junipers at the edge of the rancheria. The first water had flowed through the arroyo which had been so dry when Don Portola crossed that he named it "Arroyo Seco"—the dry arroyo. The rancheria spread northward over many acres of level mesa and reached westward almost to the meeting of the waters of the Arroyo Seco with those of the Porciuncula—that larger river, which, could Pascual but have known it, would in time be called the "Rio Los Angeles."

Far above the arroyo's heated sands of summer and its turbid winter waters, the rancheria stretched beside a beautiful cienega of ever-flowing springs, which kept it a spot of life and cool greenness. The largest of the springs was walled with rocks and from it a rough ditch led its winding way to a far corner of the outer plaza. Here were the temescals—the rounded, mud-covered bathing huts of the medicine men. Guarding the spring, one one either side, were two giant live oaks, giving shade to half the plaza. North of the oak trees stood the long, low, tule-thatched lodge of the chief. A pasada—a covered passageway—divided the lodge into two uneven sections and provided an entrance to an inner plaza or domestic court, in which the women helped sometimes by the old men of the tribe, wove their tule cloth, made willow baskets, ground flour, and cooked. Well-filled granaries stood along the arroyo side of this inner plaza; and, circling its further side and extending out into the mesa, were the lodges of the village. The circular lodge of worship stood in the outer plaza on the side opposite the spring, between the chief's lodge and the row of temescals.

Pascual could, below the wide-spreading branches of the oaks, look northward and see, in the distance, the pass by which Don Portola must enter the valley on his return. To this point he had again sent his guides, with supplies of food, to wait and watch. Once the heavy rains of the winter set in, the valleys would be impassable; and the mountain trails would be blocked with snow. The coming of the New Year would surely bring Don Portola. Pascual expected him now—he must come soon!

Not until the sixteenth day of the new year did a runner return with news of Don Portola. He was coming, but oh, how changed! He had not discovered Monterey! He had not founded a mission! His supplies had given out! His men were ragged, sick and hungry! The party would arrive next day—the seventeenth day of January of the year 1770! From his bountiful supply Pascual made ready. There should be a feast that would cheer the souls of men, worse, by far, than Don Portola and his discouraged crew.

There is no need to tell of the joy of the Spaniards at their safe return to his friendly Mesa of Pascual el Capitan. The diary kept by Father Crespi gives a faithful account of all their wanderings; and now, indeed, was a table set before them in the wilderness!

Totally exhausted by their climb over the last divide the Spaniards had been forced to spend the night—that of January the 16th—at the base of the pass near where the San Fernando Mission now stands. With scant breakfast of nuts and berries, they continued onward next day, toward the Mesa of the Golden Altar Cloth. They needed all the cheer of happy memories of its beauty and the naming of the plain, as well as the christening of the Indian chief, in honor of Holy Easter. It seemed so long ago—before their frightful hardships. Maps of the coast had been wrong; they had gone too far to the north; they had found a new bay and there had planted a cross—but this was not Monterey. On the long way southward they had been lost for many days in the ranges along the coast.

Pascual el Capitan met them at the upper ford of the arroyo and led them to the safety of his tribal home. Here was rest and healing for the Spaniards. Medicine of the buckthorne root and of the soapwood! Plasters of yerba-santa and of the soothing manzanita meal! Hot baths of the temescals and bandages of the cheetoc for their bruised feet! Here, too, in the spacious plaza, beside the sparkling spring and under the great, fair oaks, he set a feast!

A low mound of earth had been raised in the center of the feasting space and covered with a thick mat of ferns and bunch grass. Upon this mound were placed succulent barbecued and richly savored deer, prepared in the deep fire pits of the inner plaza. Here the activity had been unceasing since first the runner had returned telling of the Spaniards. Great baskets full of hot acorn mush had been prepared and hundreds of small, round loaves of acorn bread, of pine-nut bread and bread from crowfoot seed, were baked on red-hot stones beneath coverings of moist leaves. Great conical baskets were filled with fresh holly berries and other baskets with the spicy meats of the pine nuts.

At Pascual's command, when all was ready, four great groups formed about the central mound—the aisles between outlining an Indian cross—the swastika. Beside Pascual, in the section nearest to his lodge, were Don Portola, his captains, and visiting chiefs, summoned quickly by swift runners. Father Crespi and Father Gomez were in the section before the lodge of worship, surrounded by the seers of the Hahamongas and other tribes. In the two outer sections, on the side nearest the temescals were young braves and on the side nearest to the spring were the Spanish soldiers. Pascual sat with his back to the pasada and here he tasted, as he must, with true Indian hospitality, each new dish to prove its lack of poison.

"Senors!" exclaimed Pascual, addressing Don Portola and his men. "This day, this feast, my home, my heart, all are yours! To your great King and to your God I dedicate this feast! Henceforth my people shall worship in your way!"

"Good Pascual!" Don Portola made response. "We owe our lives to you! The friendly teachings of your eagle-god have saved this land for Spain. Truly it must be our worship is the same. Father Crespi, let us pray!"

The feast was on! Baskets of good things lined the aisles between the groups of banqueters. There were venison and acorn bread and large sections of bear meat.

"Mana-hoo! Mana-hoo!" Indian shouts filled the air as piping mats of roasted rabbits, squirrel and quail appeared.

Roots of the tule and the camass, heated in the steaming leaves with the barbecued meat, vied with wild onions, garlic and mushrooms roasted in the ashes. Wild lettuce and water cress from the edge of the cienega; seeds of the wild oat and the clover; alfilleria and the chia sage; elder berries and cactus pears; wild cherries and berries of the chinquapin and whortleberry oaks, gave zest, while manzanita cider, tea of the mint and mulien, of sassafras, spignet and yellow dock furnished their cheer. Oh, the wealth of nature's supply for those who did not have to till the ground!

The hum of men's voices now rose above the service sounds, and as hunger vanished faithful pipes of wood and stone were brought out, and the fragrant smoke of native tobacco rose on the evening air. The soldiers burst forth once more with the songs that had cheered them through the mountains as they journeyed northward. The Indians danced again their dance of the garnered harvest—weaving through the aisles. Great fires were lighted and the women and old men, their service over, partook of the still bountiful supplies.

Don Portola and Pascual el Capitan talked much during the feast of the plans of Spain in Alta California and of the mission that should rise here in this valley. First, Monterey—then San Gabriel and many others. So Don Portola planned and promised. Pascual alone had saved him from death and sheer destruction.

Who would again have had the vision and courage of Don Portola to press on against all odds! Who can say how differently history might now be written if it had not been for the New Year's feast of Pascual el Capitan?

A Good Reason.

Where the Golden Poppies Grow.

There's a land of rarest beauties
  Living by the peaceful sea,
Where Nature spreads her bounties
  With a lavish hand and free;
It is here I love to greet the dawn
  And watch the sunset glow,
    In lovely California
    Where the Golden Poppies grow.

The orchard blossoms scent the air
  And flowers of rarest hue
Drink in the gleaming sunlight
  The whole long season through.
Of all the lands the earth around
  None can compare, I know,
    With lovely California
  Where the Golden Poppies grow.

Along the "King's Highway," the sacred trail
  Of Mission days of old—
Which crosses plains and verdant meads—
  O'er mountains stored with gold—
Here in springtime the Eschscolzia,
  Native flower, lends its glow,
    In lovely California
    Where the Golden Poppies grow.

Waves of ocean bathe the shores
  Where millions yet to come
Will make this land their dwelling-place—
  Their happy earthly home;
And pines and redwoods guard the peaks
  Crowned with the living snow
    In lovely California
    Where the Golden Poppies grow.

Meditation.

I had a friend in days gone by,
  A neighbor true and tried;
And in his noble life I found
  Sweet peace exemplified.
I loved him as I loved my soul,
  He was so kind and true,
And yet I failed to tell him so,
  As neighbors often do.

I stood at last beside his grave
  And thought the while I gazed,
"Oh why should man in life be mocked
  And when he's dead be praised?
Oh, that I had said the word!
  Nor waited these late hours
To pay a debt of gratitude
  With eulogies and flowers.

"How cruel and unkind in me
  Who failed to recognize
A brother's many worthy deeds
  Till cold and dead he lies.
Awaken thou! My slumbering soul,
  Cast off all pride and fear
And when a word of praise is due
  Proclaim it, far and near.
Bestow thy gifts on living friends;
  Help them life's ills to brave,
And win in life, not in death,
  Love's victory o'er the grave."

'Twas thus I mused, as there I stood
  That day through those dark hours,
While other friends spake words of praise
  And strewed his grave with flowers.

Tattooing in South Seas.

The gentle art of tattooing as it is practised in the South Seas is rapidly passing, according to Frederick O'Brien, in the Century. At one time it was a matter of record for the individual's accomplishments and distinguishing marks, a sort of heraldry, but the old artists died out, and the islands began to fill with bunglers and near-artists whose work was a botch. This was not so much the falt of the artist's lack of ability as his lack of practice.

The artist must have a living model on which to practice, and living models were hard to get and became more and more difficult to bribe into standing still while the would-be artist pricked away. It wasn't the pain of the thing, although that is a great deal, but it was the fact that the amateur worker's results were generally funny or cartoon-ike, and the model's friends and relatives made all manner of fun of the decorations that would not wash off. It finally came to a point where only the most degraded of the natives would submit to being practiced on and, the supply being gone, the profession began to pass as well. A few of the old artists are left, and their work is beautiful as well as exact, and rich white women are not above having richly colored butterflies tattooed on their legs or breast, or a flower of delicate outline twined on their arms or back.

They Survive Freezing Weather.

Insects which spend most of their lives in a torpid or semitorpid condition are seldom injured and never killed by being frozen. There are numerous instances of travelers in mountain regions having found beetles and butterflies above the snow line which were stiff, frozen, and apparently dead. When carried down to the warmer air in the valley, however, they revived in a very short time.—[Exchange.

Three Sheets in the Wind—A Sea Tale.

BY MORGAN ROBERTSON.

THE most convincing lecture or lesson on morals is the one delivered by an immoral, or unmoral, person. I learned this in early life, when, with a crowd of other youngsters, I was trying to drown a half-grown puppy. We would have succeeded; but, along came a tramp—a ragged, dirty, black-bearded derelict—who watched us a moment, then gave utterance to a villainous flood of billingsgate. I cannot write down the names he called us, nor the adjectives with which he qualified the names; but his concluding speech, expurgated, ran something like this: "Any man or boy, who will ill-treat a dumb and defenseless animal that can't talk back and explain matters, is mean, that's all—just mean. He's mean enough to steal the cross off the donkey's back."

Then, still storming at us, he reeled on his way, while we rescued the half-dead creature and nursed it back to life. Later, we found it a home, and began an unorganized, unofficial humane society. We lied, stole, tickled the devil and played truant as before, but were a menace to other boys who, with the savagery of children, found pleasure in cruelty. The tramp's anger and disgust had done more for us than the behests of father, mother, or Sunday-school teacher.

With pity for dumb brutes my one moral quality, I grew up and went to sea, where morals are not taught—where nothing is taught or acquired but seamanship, navigation and iron-clad stamina and endurance. These attributes came to me in time, as well as a mate's certificate; but in all else I remained at a standstill or backwards. Sailors are children, it is said, and like all sailors, even when I berthed aft, I grumbled, quarreled, swore, and drank, with no restraining or principle to curb me until—I—received my second lesson in morals—or ethics, if you like—and this time from a man I despised. Afterward I received other tutelage, and finally became the civilized commander of a passenger steamship; but my later development has no place in this story, which is concerned only with that second lecture and the events which followed—events that made me a teetotaler for life.

This lecture came from Bill Edwards, who, as second mate of my ship, had kicked me off the poop and hazed me for the whole voyage because I had dared raise my voice in boyish protest at his "sprit-sail-yarding" of a shark that he caught with a line pulled aboard. I lacked the vocabulary and the superiority in size and strength possessed by the mate, so my protest was ignored, and the shark alive and uninjured, went overboard with a small spar lashed athwart its mouth, to die of starvation. As it is, more grain goes into making of booze than of bread. Dead broke?"

I nodded.

"I'm not, even though I never had your chance, not having any schooling. I never signed above second mate, because I couldn't learn navigation. But I've jumped above first mate and skipper. I'm owner—I employ skippers and mates." I looked at him with surprise. He certainly was well dressed.

"I've made money," he went on. "Never mind how. I've made it, and taken a Chinese partner with me. We bought a schooner from the underwriters, patched her up, and mean to make some more money with her. She's up at the Carriage Drive. I go out skipper, for I can handle her; but I want a licensed sailing master with papers to satisfy the law. You've got'm. Want the berth?"

"Want a drink more than anything else," I answered abandonedly.

"You want your breakfast more than anything else, I take it. But if you'll ship with me I'll buy you a drink of Frisco's grog to steady you, and get your clothes, but there'll be no advance. We can board just in time for dinner, which will be breakfast for you. I'll give you another bracer at 5 o'clock and that will end it. We sail to Yokohama in ballast for a cargo to Frisco. And remember, in port I am managing owner and you are skipper; but at sea I'm skipper and you're mate. You are to navigate, keep the log correctly, and oversee the accounts and ship's papers. What do you say?"

"I'll go you," I said, rising. "Any port in a storm?"

"You mean any ship in a port, I guess; but that's the way you make it come on."

I was given a drink over Frisco Frank's bar and after a few sharp words between Frank and Edwards, my chest was returned to me. Then we rode up to the wharf and boarded the schooner.

She had been a yacht; but her long, overhanging, sharp lines, lofty spars and flush deck were the only yacht-like characteristics left of her. Her original cabins, dinner rooms and staterooms below had given way to cargo space, and all skylights and companions had been eliminated or turned into hatches—all but two of the latters. A companion just abaft the windlass led to a triangle forecast in the bows containing bunks for five and a stove for cooking, and another, just forward of the wheel, led to an equally diminutive cabin that was nothing but a hall space at the foot of the stairs with a room on each side—one for the skipper, the other for the mate. There was also a feature in this craft that I had never seen in another. She was piped for gas lighting; each room in the cabin, the forecastle, binnacle, and even fixed sides and masthead lamps contained a wire enclosed burner, fed by a tank of compressed gas under the cabin floor.

"It seemed to work all right," explained Edwards, "so I had left it rather than spend $50 for an outfit of lamps and oil. And, then, there are Pintsch gas buoys everywhere. We can always recharge the tank."

This, and his refusal of an advance, were not the only evidences of Edward's shortage fund. The dinner he sat me down to was boiled rice and weak tea—the same as he fed his five coolies forward—and when he took me ashore in the afternoon to act as sailing master in getting out ship's papers he would "clear" at the customhouse. With the schooner's rotten condition in mind I thought at the time that he also ought to insure our lives, but did not say so; he might have repeated his paraphrase: "Any ship in a storm."

I did not see the Chinese partner, nor did I see any more of Edwards until, having put up a dreary afternoon, he came aboard promptly at 5 and gave me the bracer which I sadly needed.

At supper, which we ate on a small folding table in the hall space between our rooms, which included, with the rice and tea, trepang, or dried fish, a huge, half-starved cat bounded down the stairs and into my berth, where, like all cats in strange places, it voiced its distress in loud yowls.

"Drive that brute ashore," he said angrily.

"Sanctuary," I answered calmly. "I'll feed it first."

"You'll do nothing of the kind. I want no cats on board. They're bad luck."

"I've always found them good luck. Strange cats come to me, and I always treat them well."

I picked up my half-eaten supper and turned to my door.

"Do you want your berth here?" asked Edwards, rising to his feet.

"Yes," I answered, facing him with the plate in my hand.

"Then you do as I say," he said. "Drive that beast away."

"Are you ready to hand over a month's pay?"

"What? For half a day's work?"

"I'm on the article as sailing maste.. You've got the papers, but you'll have to produce them on demand. Ask the Consul, Mr. Edwards."

"Capt. Edwards," he spluttered.

"Mister Edwards," I replied, emphasizing the prefix. "I'm captain here, and until you pay me off, either now or at Yokohama, your rights stop where mine begin. I'm going to feed the poor cat."

He stared blankly at me, and I entered my room with the food. A few soft words and gentle strokes quieted the frightened animal, and it greedily at my supper, then purred so gratefully that I didn't have the heart to put him ashore, so leaving it stretched out in my berth I went out. Having conquered Edwards I felt no anger for myself, so going up to him, asked him when we would sail.

"We tow down the first thing in the morning," he answered, much more civil than I expected.

"I'm telling you that," he added, "because you have a right to know. But as you claim other rights that I'm not sure of, I fall back on rights of my own that I'm sure of. Don't speak to me except about work while you are in this packet. I want none o' your conversation."

"Very well, Mr. Edwards," I answered. "But I expect the same from you."

Then, as darkness was closing down, I went forward, lighted the port, or shore, side light, as a warning to passing craft, inspected the mooring lines, set the night watch, and came aft in a mood to fight Edwards, but he had gone down into his berth.

In the morning I left the cat in the closet room, until, after a silent breakfast with Edwards, I ostentatiously fed it, then, after the tug had taken us clear of the dock, I released it for a run on deck, at the same time warning the coolie crew that if they troubled it harm would come to them. I warned the Chinamen, because they were like babies, and I never could remember their names five minutes. I said nothing to

PASCUAL EL CAPITAN'S FEAST TO PORTOLA

by stars when all routes failed; Ortega and the Franciscan Fathers, Crespi and Gomez—all were buoyant at the thought of the rediscovery of Monterey, and the founding there, to the glory of God and to His Majesty, the King of Spain, of the second mission of Alta California.

"Viva Cabrillo! Viva Viscaino! Viva Gaspar, Compt de Monterey!" were the shouts of the soldiers and the muleteers as they journeyed through the canyons, over mountains, and across the plains that separated them from their goal. Their songs had resounded through the defiles of the Sierra Madre:

"Cuando los matadores
Se matan en la Corrida,
Alla vendran bonitas
Ver matar o vivir.
Ta-ra-la-la-la!

(When the brave matadors
Strive in the contest high.
Trooping come the pretty girls
To see them fight or die!
Ta-ra-la-la-la!)

Me gustan todas,
Me gustan todas!
Ta-ra-la-la,
Ta-ra-la-la!

(I love them all,
I love them all!
Ta-ra-la-la,
Ta-ra-la-la,
Ta-ra-la-la-la!)

Thus had they gone from the happy land of Pascual el Capitan.

Six long months had passed and no word had come back to Pascual el Capitan. Guides of his tribe had led Don Portola past the villages of the Cabuenga and on through the first mountain passes; beyond the village of the Huenemes, and to the greatest pass of all—the Tah-ee-chay-pah—from which Don Portola could see his route for leagues ahead and the guides had then returned.

It was now mid-January, 1770. Pascual el Capitan had again put on the velvet jacket and breeches trimmed with gold—gifts from Don Portola, and sat, admired of all his tribe, before his lodge. The first winter rains had fallen and a quiet beauty had settled down over mesa and valley. The leaves of the giant sycamores in the arroyo below had turned a golden brown, and been scattered far by the winds from the north.

The rains had washed the summer's dust from the live oaks—the "haha" trees—which had given their name to these tribes of the mesa. The grasses on the hills were brown, but there was a freshness and fairness to all nature such as Pascual thought he had not known before. The quail had come down from the mountains and now nested each night in the willows and junipers at the edge of the rancheria. The first water had flowed through the arroyo which had been so dry when Don Portola crossed that he named it "Arroyo Seco"—the dry arroyo. The rancheria spread northward over many acres of level mesa and reached westward almost to the meeting of the waters of the Arroyo Seco with those of the Porciuncula—that larger river, which, could Pascual but have known it, would in time be called the "Rio Los Angeles."

Far above the arroyo's heated sands of summer and its turbid winter waters, the rancheria stretched beside a beautiful cienega of ever-flowing springs, which kept it a spot of life and cool greenness. The largest of the springs was walled with rocks and from it a rough ditch led its winding way to a far corner of the outer plaza. Here were the temescals—the rounded, mud-covered bathing huts of the medicine men. Guarding the spring, one one either side, were two giant live oaks, giving shade to half the plaza. North of the oak trees stood the long, low, tule-thatched lodge of the chief. A pasada—a covered passageway—divided the lodge into two uneven sections and provided an entrance to an inner plaza or domestic court, in which the women helped sometimes by the old men of the tribe, wove their tule cloth, made willow baskets, ground flour, and cooked. Well-filled granaries stood along the arroyo side of this inner plaza; and, circling its further side and extending out into the mesa, were the lodges of the village. The circular lodge of worship stood in the outer plaza on the side opposite the spring, between the chief's lodge and the row of temescals.

Pascual could, below the wide-spreading branches of the oaks, look northward and see, in the distance, the pass by which Don Portola must enter the valley on his return. To this point he had again sent his guides, with supplies of food, to wait and watch. Once the heavy rains of the winter set in, the valleys would be impassable; and the mountain trails would be blocked with snow. The coming of the New Year would surely bring Don Portola. Pascual expected him now—he must come soon!

Not until the sixteenth day of the new year did a runner return with news of Don Portola. He was coming, but oh, how changed! He had not discovered Monterey! He had not founded a mission! His supplies had given out! His men were ragged, sick and hungry! The party would arrive next day—the seventeenth day of January of the year 1770! From his bountiful supply Pascual made ready. There should be a feast that would cheer the souls of men, worse, by far, than Don Portola and his discouraged crew.

There is no need to tell of the joy of the Spaniards at their safe return to his friendly Mesa of Pascual el Capitan. The diary kept by Father Crespi gives a faithful account of all their wanderings; and now, indeed, was a table set before them in the wilderness!

Totally exhausted by their climb over the last divide the Spaniards had been forced to spend the night—that of January the 16th—at the base of the pass near where the San Fernando Mission now stands. With scant breakfast of nuts and berries, they continued onward next day, toward the Mesa of the Golden Altar Cloth. They needed all the cheer of happy memories of its beauty and the naming of the plain, as well as the christening of the Indian chief, in honor of Holy Easter. It seemed so long ago—before their frightful hardships. Maps of the coast had been wrong; they had gone too far to the north; they had found a new bay and there had planted a cross—but this was not Monterey. On the long way southward they had been lost for many days in the ranges along the coast.

Pascual el Capitan met them at the upper ford of the arroyo and led them to the safety of his tribal home. Here was rest and healing for the Spaniards. Medicine of the buckthorne root and of the soapwood! Plasters of yerba-santa and of the soothing manzanita meal! Hot baths of the temescals and bandages of the cheetoc for their bruised feet! Here, too, in the spacious plaza, beside the sparkling spring and under the great, fair oaks, he set a feast!

A low mound of earth had been raised in the center of the feasting space and covered with a thick mat of ferns and bunch grass. Upon this mound were placed succulent barbecued and richly savored deer, prepared in the deep fire pits of the inner plaza. Here the activity had been unceasing since first the runner had returned telling of the Spaniards. Great baskets full of hot acorn mush had been prepared and hundreds of small, round loaves of acorn bread, of pine-nut bread and bread from crowfoot seed, were baked on red-hot stones beneath coverings of moist leaves. Great conical baskets were filled with fresh holly berries and other baskets with the spicy meats of the pine nuts.

At Pascual's command, when all was ready, four great groups formed about the central mound—the aisles between outlining an Indian cross—the swastika. Beside Pascual, in the section nearest to his lodge, were Don Portola, his captains, and visiting chiefs, summoned quickly by swift runners. Father Crespi and Father Gomez were in the section before the lodge of worship, surrounded by the seers of the Hahamongas and other tribes. In the two outer sections, on the side nearest the temescals were young braves and on the side nearest to the spring were the Spanish soldiers. Pascual sat with his back to the pasada and here he tasted, as he must, with true Indian hospitality, each new dish to prove its lack of poison.

"Senors!" exclaimed Pascual, addressing Don Portola and his men. "This day, this feast, my home, my heart, all are yours! To your great King and to your God I dedicate this feast! Henceforth my people shall worship in your way!"

"Good Pascual!" Don Portola made response. "We owe our lives to you! The friendly teachings of your eagle-god have saved this land for Spain. Truly it must be our worship is the same. Father Crespi, let us pray!"

The feast was on! Baskets of good things filled the aisles between the groups of banqueters. There were venison and acorn bread and large sections of bear meat.

"Mana-hoo! Mana-hoo!" Indian shouts filled the air as piping mats of roasted rabbits, squirrel and quail appeared.

Roots of the tule and the camass, heated in the steaming leaves with the barbecued meat, vied with wild onions, garlic and mushrooms roasted in the ashes. Wild lettuce and water cress from the edge of the cienega; seeds of the wild oat and the clover; alfilleria and the chia sage; elder berries and cactus pears; wild cherries and berries of the chinquapin and whortleberry oaks, gave zest, while manzanita cider, tea of the mint and mulien, of sassafras, spignet and yellow dock furnished their cheer. Oh, the wealth of nature's supply for those who did not have to till the ground!

The hum of men's voices now rose above the service sounds, and as hunger vanished faithful pipes of wood and stone were brought out, and the fragrant smoke of native tobacco rose on the evening air. The soldiers burst forth once more with the songs that had cheered them through the mountains as they journeyed northward. The Indians danced again their dance of the garnered harvest—weaving through the aisles. Great fires were lighted and the women and old men, their service over, partook of the still bountiful supplies.

Don Portola and Pascual el Capitan talked much during the feast of the plans of Spain in Alta California and of the mission that should rise here in this valley. First, Monterey—then San Gabriel and many others. So Don Portola planned and promised. Pascual alone had saved him from death and sheer destruction.

Who would again have had the vision and courage of Don Portola to press on against all odds! Who can say how differently history might now be written if it had not been for the New Year's feast of Pascual el Capitan?

A Good Reason.

Where the Golden Poppies Grow.

There's a land of rarest beauties
Living by the peaceful sea,
Where Nature spreads her bounties
With a lavish hand and free;
It is here I love to greet the dawn
And watch the sunset glow,
In lovely California
Where the Golden Poppies grow.

The orchard blossoms scent the air
And flowers of rarest hue
Drink in the gleaming sunlight
The whole long season through.
Of all the lands the earth around
None can compare, I know,
With lovely California
Where the Golden Poppies grow.

Along the "King's Highway," the sacred trail
Of Mission days of old—
Which crosses plains and verdant meads—
O'er mountains stored with gold—
Here in springtime the Eschscolzia,
Native flower, lends its glow,
In lovely California
Where the Golden Poppies grow.

Waves of ocean bathe the shores
Where millions yet to come
Will make this land their dwelling-place—
Their happy earthly home;
And pines and redwoods guard the peaks
Crowned with the living snow
In lovely California
Where the Golden Poppies grow.

Meditation.

I had a friend in days gone by,
A neighbor true and tried;
And in his noble life I found
Sweet peace exemplified.
I loved him as I loved my soul,
He was so kind and true,
And yet I failed to tell him so,
As neighbors often do.

I stood at last beside his grave
And thought the while I gazed,
"Oh why should man in life be mocked
And when he's dead be praised?
Oh, that I had said the word!
Nor waited these late hours
To pay a debt of gratitude
With eulogies and flowers.

"How cruel and unkind in me
Who failed to recognize
A brother's many worthy deeds
Till cold and dead he lies.
Awaken thou! My slumbering soul,
Cast off all pride and fear
And when a word of praise is due
Proclaim it, far and near.
Bestow thy gifts on living friends;
Help them life's ills to brave,
And win in life, not in death,
Love's victory o'er the grave."

'Twas thus I mused, as there I stood
That day through those dark hours,
While other friends spake words of praise
And strewed his grave with flowers.

Tattooing in South Seas.

The gentle art of tattooing, as it is practiced in the South Seas is rapidly passing, according to Frederick O'Brien, in the Century. At one time it was a matter of record for the individual's accomplishments and distinguishing marks, a sort of heraldry, but the old artists died out, and the islands began to fill with bunglers and near-artists whose work was a botch. This was not so much the falt of the artist's lack of ability as his lack of practice.

The artist must have a living model on which to practice, and living models were hard to get and became more and more difficult to bribe into standing still while the would-be artist pricked away. It wasn't the pain of the thing, although that is a great deal, but it was the fact that the amateur worker's results were generally funny or cartoon-ike, and the model's friends and relatives made all manner of fun of the decorations that would not wash off. It finally came to a point where only the most degraded of the natives would submit to being practiced on and, the supply being gone, the profession began to pass as well. A few of the old artists are left, and their work is beautiful as well as exact, and rich white women are not above having richly colored butterflies tattooed on their legs or breast, or a flower of delicate outline twined on their arms or back.

They Survive Freezing Weather.

Insects which spend most of their lives in a torpid or semitorpid condition are seldom injured and never killed by being frozen. There are numerous instances of travelers in mountain regions having found beetles and butterflies above the snow line which were stiff, frozen, and apparently dead. When carried down to the warmer air in the valley, however, they revived in a very short time.—[Exchange.

Apples of Wood—A Tale of the East.

BY DUDLEY S. CORLETT.

A COLD steady rain fell in long lines of glistening steel on the ill-paved road. A damp and fetid breath rose from the running kennels, and a clammy steam crept up from mouldy wall and sodden roof, where grew rank crops of weeds. Gray was the heavy pall clouding the sky, gray and cheerless the dripping street. At the edge of the pavement, sheltered by the roof of the market place, an old woman squatted on her heels. The damp fringe of her sari hung in dank folds on either side of her wrinkled yellow face, in which brooded two melancholy eyes looking forth hopelessly upon an unkind world. Her emaciated body was clad in a one-piece sari of faded, dark red cotton which, wound around her waist, formed a rudimentary skirt and crossing over her lean shoulders draped over her head. In front of her, touching the toes of her bare feet, was a shallow-round basket of plaited palm in which lay a little pile of hard, greyish-yellow fruit the size of small apples. Fibrous and woody in nature, and niggardly of sweetness, they formed a species of sustenance to only the very poor who, gnawing and chewing patiently the fibrous flesh around the stone, were thus enabled to ward off the pangs of hunger till chance or the gutter yielded garbage more delicate. Only to the wild elephant in the jungle were they acceptable, and he with his trunk would pull them off the tree and crunch them in his mighty molars to an acrid pulp.

As the woman stared forth at the pitiless rain, her gnarled yellow fingers absently turned the apples over and over. There were sixteen. Sixteen apples of wood. But to the widow they were all she had left, all that remained to her of sixteen years of wedded life, years of comparative comfort and happiness. Then in one swift, bitter week Fate snatched from her grasp all she possessed save life itself.

Her husband was a Brahmin, the Hindu caste consecrated to the service of the gods. He was a stalwart cultivator of temple lands in the Deccan, not far from the old Marrattah town of Poona. So a small, mud-walled, grass-thatched hut in the village he had brought his little, 13-year-old bride and here their twelve children were born. Four only had survived the ills of childhood, three strong boys and a girl. Early and late had they toiled in the stony field to sow and reap the scanty crops of pulse and corn grudgingly yielded from an infertile soil. In years of famine when the rains failed, they had endured with silent misery the gnawing pangs of daily hunger, uncomplaining of their lot with the grim philosophy that the next crop might be more abundant. Gaunt skeletons clad in parchmentlike skin they yet must toil to fetch and carry wood and water and grind the pitiful handful of grain for the family supper. And it was these work-worn fingers, toying with the wooden fruit, that had silently borne the brunt of the burdensome toil.

Then came the day when the city was stricken with plague and the townfolk, panic-stricken, fled from the pestilence that prowled about the streets, and camping in the open country, spread the fatal seeds of death abroad whithersoever they went. They invaded the quiet village, clamored for houseroom or slept in parties under the trees in rude shelters. But death followed in their footsteps and daily the little burning-ghat down by the shrunken stream sent up an ever-increasing number of sinister columns of heavy smoke, whose stench of burnt flesh sullied the sweet breath of the fields. It was as incense before the shrines of angry gods, crying to Siva to stay his hand heavy in the destruction of his people.

Too late did the family note the warning sign of the rat dead upon the floor, ere the youngest boy was stricken and died in the hot, ghastly night. Not yet had his soul ascended in smoke ere the girl followed and the distraught father and remaining sons laid her too with her brother beneath the piled wood and fuel soaked in oil. Then the two boys died, and the father followed last. Only the widow remained in the empty hut, bereft of all feeling, overwhelmed by her fate. And the law of the white sahib forbade suti, that she too could follow where they had gone. Uncomprehending she drifted on, blindly following a destiny preordained by the gods that be. And when the terror of the pestilence had gone, came relations of her husband to take possession of his home and fields. The widow was shorn of her hair, and left bald beneath the tattered sari that was flung to her to wear; the poor glass bangles, the beads and bits of tarnished ornaments she loved were forfeited—no widow might go thus adorned. The lowest drudgery of household work was hers, and naught but curses and the scrapings of the pots and pans her lot. Slowly beat the pulses in her shriveled veins, feebly she dragged her aching limbs about her toil, weary of a life less valued than the pariah that scratched his fleas upon the hearth. Then famine came once more, and they turned her from their door, from the home that once was hers to beg her bread upon the road. Beside the door there grew the gnarled old tree that bore the wooden fruit her babes had played with as they crawled about its shade. Despairingly she gathered those within reach with some vague idea of selling them for pice, rather than to beg.

Thus by slow degrees she had reached the city as the first rains of the delayed monsoon broke and relieved the famine.

A carriage passed by drawn by fat horses, splashing mud upon the woman squatting on the curb. She watched it and the lovely unveiled Parsee girl it contained, lying back upon her cushions. Delicate as any lily were her limbs; great languid eyes set in the pale ivory of an oval face. Embroidered silks of rose and cream draped gracefully about her form, and gems of value sparkled on her blue-veined hands.

"May the birds of the air destroy thee," said a deep voice in an undertone from some one standing behind the widow. "May the sharp hook of a vulture's beak pluck out thy languorous eyes and the armed claws of kites rend thy delicate limbs. Sleep thou in the Towers of Silence, rather than thy shameful bed of iniquity!"

The widow looked up at a tall man who had stepped beside her to gaze angrily after the carriage splashing through the rain. He wore a curiously shaped, high-crowned hat of shiny leather, and spotless white linen tunic and red trousers which the passing carriage had sullied with a spot or two of mud. Yet it surely could not be so slight an accident which had called forth so vindictive a vent to his feelings. He carried a large umbrella with which he viciously stabbed the pavement. Then the Parsee looked down upon the damp, drab object cowering at his feet. "Rather would I see her such as thee, thou poor outcast woman, than flaunting by in her carriage. At least thou art honest, wronging no one. Whilst she," and he spat viciously into the rain, "hath she not decoyed my son, my only son, into her toils. Married him against my will, brought him to ruin with luxurious living, the aping of western ways, drinking, gambling and horse-racing? Truly the gods are blind, if gods there be. What have thy gods done for thee? Brahma in an evil hour created thee; Vishnu for a sportive day maintained thee in poverty and woe; and now Shiv utterly destroys thee in the night, casting thy soul who shall say whither? What have my gods done for me? The fire hath burnt my soul and singed my honor; the earth hath bred that evil thing to shame my house, to stifle my ambitions; the air hath filled my son with empty vaporings, masking with mist the mirror of his honor. There remains but water. It may be that in that sweet element I yet may cleanse my hands from the spotted evil of this woman. May yet purge my mouth from the acrid gall with which she fills it. It may heal my sorrows, drown my tribulations. To thee, O water, I commend my soul!" and putting up his black umbrella he plunged forth into the rain, muttering as he went.

Came a mud-splashed fakir, his disheveled hair hanging in matted locks about his hollow face with little, blood-shot eyes like living coals. So thin that every bone of the naked body showed through the polished, black skin. The hips stood out from the sunken stomach below which was twisted a mud-colored rag. Squatting beside the woman, but being careful not to touch her, he hungrily eyed the apples of wood. At least some creature desired them. Said he, "The purse of charity is as empty as its stomach these lean days of famine. Naught have I eaten these three days and more. But now, a woman praying for a son gave me three pies as offering to the gods." He scoffed. "Doth she think the great gods can see so small a sum? Nonetheless I will buy thy apples, they be more filling than the meager measure of pulse three pies would buy me. They will clean my teeth in the gnawing; their toughness will extend the feast; and at least the chewed pulp will fill my belly. Is it a bargain?"

"Four pies?" said the woman in a dull and toneless voice. Not that she wanted either the fruit or the money but merely from instinctive inborn habit of haggling.

"Three," said the fakir, disentangling them from some secret hiding place in the midst of his matted hair. "I have no more," and he threw them in the widow's lap. Mechanically she gathered up the three tiny copper coins, which yet in the land of Hind can purchase a scanty meal.

The fakir gathered up his purchase, basket and all, and stalked down the water-running roadway, indifferent to the rain, to seek his distant lair.

With the loss of her apples of wood, the wretched widow felt that the last spark of interest that held her to life had vanished and she started half-regretfully through the rain where the fakir had gone, as though she would call him back.

Presently the rain thinned to a drizzle, and finally died despondently away, leaving a dull gray evening, chill with murky mists. The widow rose stiffly and keeping well in the middle of the roadway lest her person by some mischance should touch and contaminate a passer-by, she took her way westward.

In time she came to the center of the crowded city where, in a wide space, stood the old Marrattah citadel, the half-ruined walls of the fort still frowning on the huddied hovels lapping its fallen bricks. The great iron-studded gates stood fast closed, presenting a still defiant front to a world who treated its fallen greatness with contempt, its boasted impregnability as a delusion of its part. The broad band of spikes bristling across the middle of the doors, rusted since the last assault when they had challenged the charging elephants to use their broad brows to batter down the doors. Departed was its living glory and like the woman creeping beneath the crumbling shelter of its walls, death and decay had already laid their ruthless hands upon its face to wipe it clean away.

As the sun was setting in broken belts of molten gold gleaming through ash-gray bars of cloud, the Brahmin widow left the steaming town and came out upon the sodden fields. On a little rise she turned and looked back over the city above which floated a blue pall of smoke from cooking suppers, to where beyond the town rose a solitary hill crowned with the gilded domes of the temples of Siva and his wife Parbati. Then something in the desolate heart of the widow stirred as she remembered the summer day long ago when she and her young husband, gay in festal attire, climbed the long flights of rock-hewn stairs to make offerings, proffer prayers and whisper their needs at those flower-decked shrines. And it was to Parbati she had prayed, begged for the boon of a son, and when that first-born came had she not sent an offering of jasmine wreaths, sweet oil and incense to the divine mother who had answered her prayer? And the goddess had but given to take away, to leave her bereft of all held dear—a childless widow! The sharp pain of the swordstab made her turn away. Surely amongst these was not found the God of Comfort.

A little way on she saw a poor woman resting beside the road and suckling her babe. As the widow passed she dropped the three pies into the woman's lap saying, "Thee and thine hath more need of this than I," and passed on to the murmur of the mother's whispered thanks.

"Presently she came to a little crowd gathered round a Brahmin priest beneath a spreading banyan tree, its broad wet leaves shining like silver in the fading light. Against the dark, damp stem of the tree and between the gnarled roots the priest had set up a shapeless stone, plastered with a light-red clay. Round this he had placed a wreath of faded sacred marigolds and told the people here was a god. Here was a mythical divinity who had commanded that he should be its priest and minister to the needs of passers-by, who would gain much merit if they added aught to the begging-bowl upon the ground. The widow paused a while to watch the credulous and ignorant country-folk from their slender store fill the bowl with bread and rice ,and lay their hard-earned coins on the shrine of the unknown god. Was this God, who could not even provide for his priest without robbing his people, or taking the food from the mouths of starving babies to feed an idle monk? Surely this was no God to protect the poor.

The widow hurried on, for now the gold had faded from the sky and the dark shutters of the purple night were drawing down. Before her flowed a broad ribbon of swollen, sullen river, turgid with soil washed from the fields by the rains. A little above, two streams joined to form this one river and, on a spur of land where the waters united, stood a little temple. Steps of stone were set in the bank so that worshipers could wash in the magic marriage of the rivers rising, who knew where, two separate streams, to flow, who knew whither, welded in wedlock as one noble river.

A few folk still lingered on the steps; an old man cleansing his withered limbs from the mud of his toil in the fields, a couple of women gossiping as they balanced their earthern water jars on their broad hips, whilst on the step nearest the water a little girl scoured a brass dish till it shone like gold, and a Tamil beat his wrapper clean on a smooth washing stone.

Came a handsome young Marrattah lad, his turban wound with a multitude of folds rakishly over one ear. Setting this on the topmost step he pulled off his shirt and wrapping his loin-cloth tight around his thighs prepared to descend for his evening bath. True Marrattah, debonair of feature, sturdy of build, with a skin the delicate tint of brown mango leaves newly burst from the bud. The widow drew a tremulous sigh as she watched the play of his strong limbs as he sluiced the brown water over the glistening skin, and thought of her first-born with the promise of youth cut short. Just such another as this he should have been had the gods been kind. The lad came up the steps shaking the water drops from off his splendid limbs, superbly indifferent in his youth to the covert gaze of the old woman or the open admiration of the girls. Picking up his garments he began to wrap them around his still wet body. "That was refreshing, oh mother," said he to the silent old woman. "There is life in those waters for tired bodies. Stiff was I with driving the buffalo behind the plow, now am I supple again, ready for supper and bed," and flinging the wet wrapper over his shoulder he strode away in the gathering gloom.

After him the others followed, till only the old woman was left a solitary figure in faded red, bowed down with her load of desolate grief heaped upon uncomplaining shoulders by the careless hand of Fate. Alone in the gathering night with the chilly mists creeping around—abandoned by God and man. Surely the gods had forgotten, if indeed the gods were truly informed of the happenings to humans on earth. Dully she thought there could be no gods, no true gods, for there seemed none to protect the poor, nor comfort the lonely. And as she thought this her hand touched the smooth stone plinth of the polished Lingam on whose pedestal she had not noticed she had sat. The Mystic Lingam, the Symbol of Lord Siva, Master of Life and the Ultimate Destroyer. Yes, surely He was a God. Surely he was the Comforter, giving the peace of eternal sleep, the rest from all toil and trouble. Turning she clasped the cold Lingam, pressing the polished column to her aching breast. And she was strangely comforted. Divine hope stirred in her stagnant blood, set beating the sluggish heart. She would bathe, make herself ready for the Lord Siva before she would enter his temple and pray. What was it the Parsee had said. "The cold comfort of water to cleanse the body from the mud of a filthy world, to heal its sorrows, smoothe its tribulations." Yes, that was it, she would bathe where the waters wedded, rejoice in their happiness and be comforted.

With trembling limbs she tottered down the wet steps till she stood on those lapped by the water flowing swiftly by. Darkness wrapped all the land—only a faint bluish light lingered on the face of the river.

How cool were the waters as they washed the poor feet weary from tramping the roads. She descended another step and yet another, till the waters swirled gently about her knees where the rags of the wrapper floated darkly red. Yet two more steps downward and the soft river wrapped itself gently around her hips, encircling the waist once clasped in a lover's embrace. Yes! the Parsee spoke truly. The mud was all washed away, she felt clean of body, her limbs regained their youth, she felt strangely strong and braced to meet she knew not what. Another step and still one more. Ah! now she felt the river's force, felt it swirling joyfully about her breast. The burden of sorrows fell from her shoulders and she straightened them proudly to meet the current of the stream. Lightly her spirit bounded, happiness shone in her eyes as with parted lips she smiled, smiled at the simplicity of shedding sorrow!

One step lower and the dark waters lapped about her neck and loosening the wrapper floated it away. Free, she felt her bounding heart cry aloud for joy. She tossed her head, as though about her fell the mass of raven hair her bridegroom had once loved to stroke. All worldly care had vanished, gone was the daily tribulation. The soul had triumphed over body.

Suddenly she flung wide her arms to gather in the waters to her breast, embraced the river rushing in its marriage bed. "Siva!" she cried. "Thou God of Destruction! Thou and thou alone are God! Thy bride am I, Lord Siva—and I come."

And the waters softly bore away a soul refreshed.

THE PROXY AND HOW IT WORKED OUT.

time you shall have a telegram saying if I have been successful or not."

On Thursday I met Isabel at the hour appointed, but there was no time for me to send the telegram. I had barely sufficient time to rush to my chambers and put on evening dress.

"Well?" she said, when I met her.

"My client is now a free man."

"And you are made—I am so glad!" said Isabel.

"Yes, and we can start housekeeping as soon as you are willing. I wonder what Jack would say if he knew I had taken you to the theater twice this week?"

Isabel laughed and took my arm.

"What the eye never sees, the heart never feels," she remarked sapiently.

I wonder if she ever guessed the many heart-pangs she caused me during the months I deceived her father and acted proxy for her sake.

During the interval between the first two acts of the play I left her for a few moments. In the foyer I met an old friend of mine, a fellow-barrister.

"Yes, I saw you in the house," he said, on greeting me, "and saw you leave your box, so I thought I'd drop round and congratulate you. You'll be a K. C. before you're five-and-thirty. By the way, is that your sister you're with?"

"No," I replied, and before I knew, the lie was spoken. "That lady's my fiancee!"

My friend wrung my hand warmly.

"Then she must be a proud woman tonight," he said.

When I returned to the box, Isabel was intently watching a couple in the stalls, so intently that she did not notice my entry.

When I spoke to her, she pointed them out to me. It was Mr. Jack Hetherington with some young lady to whom he was paying very marked attention.

"The biter bit," I observed.

Isabel bit her lip.

"He ought to be ashamed of himself," she observed. "I shall speak to him about it tomorrow."

"He will have an obvious retort ready," I said.

"Oh, you're different, you're a friend of the family. Besides, you're his proxy."

"Yes," I replied, wondering whether Mr. Jack Hetherington would see the argument in the same light.

I did not meet Isabel again until Sunday, when I questioned her as to her interview with Mr. Jack Hetherington.

"Oh," she said carelessly, "it was one of his cousins from Basingstoke!"

There was an indifference in her speech, which did not escape me, and I began to see trouble looming ahead.

Winter passed. Christmas I spent with the Bramptons in my role of fiance. Then came spring, and Easter was within measurable distance. During the preceding weeks Hetherington's name had not been so often on Isabel's lips, and she had seen less of him, although she tried to disguise that fact from me.

I was in court one morning, just before the Easter recess, awaiting the verdict on a rather important case in which I was engaged for the defendant, when a telegram was handed up to me. It was from Isabel.

"Am coming up to town. Shall reach your chambers at noon. Must see you."

I frowned and slipped it in my pocket.

By five minutes to 12 the verdict had been given, and, rushing out of court without waiting to take off my wig and gown, I ran round the corner to my chambers.

Isabel was awaiting me. It was the first time she had seen me in my professional garb.

For a moment she surveyed me in an uncomfortable silence. Then—

"M'lud, and gentlemen of the jury," she said, mimicing my voice. "Dickie, dear, do take off those awesome vestments and look your natural self. I shall be afraid you're going to sentence me to death, or something."

I attempted to look severe.

"Now, what has happened, Isabel?" I said.

"I don't know how to tell you or what you'll say," she responded. She seated herself in my favorite arm-chair with the utmost composure. "Be prepared for the worst."

"I'm prepared for anything where you're concerned."

"That's one consolation. Our engagement's broken off. I gave Jack his ring back this morning."

She held up her left hand.

"Isabel!" I said.

"I told you to be prepared for the worst."

"You don't seem very much upset," I responded.

"Frankly, Dickie, I am not; I have known my mistake for the last few weeks."

"Then why, in the name of thunder, didn't you tell me, so that I might be prepared, instead of springing it on me all of a sudden like this?"

"Because I knew how disappointed you would be at the termination of our engagement, and it's been a very happy one, hasn't it?"

I looked at her [illegible] remark, but she was [illegible]

"For goodness' [illegible] do be serious!" I said, banging a [illegible] of papers down on the table. "Don't you realise what it means?"

"It means a very stormy interview with father. You'd better come down tonight and get it over."

I groaned inwardly at the thought.

"I'll never help you again as long as I live," I said.

"Cheer up," she said, "we're both in the same boat!" From the first she regarded the whole affair with the most cheery optimism. "We must face it together."

"Isabel," I replied, "I'm half inclined to write a letter of explanation to your father, and leave you to face the music."

She leaped to her feet and laid a hand on each of my shoulders.

"You'll never do that"—with a wise little shake of the head. "You're far too good a sportsman"—which fact I knew.

I drew out my watch.

"I've got to be back at the court by half-past two. So we've exactly a couple of hours in which to make our arrangements. You'll want some lunch."

"I've ordered your landlady to have some brought in here at half-past one."

I looked at her dumbfounded.

"She thinks we're still engaged. I haven't broken the sad news to her yet."

For half an hour we discussed it, and finally decided that we should go down to Cobham that evening and see Mr. Brampton.

"I can see no other way out of the dilemma, can you?" said Isabel. There was a tentativeness in her voice, and, meeting mine, her eyes suddenly dropped.

"Yes, one!" I said, my heart beating wildly.

Isabel's face was suddenly averted.

"Then, why didn't you mention it before?" she murmured.

I ran to her side, and took her hands in mine.

"Because I didn't dare to," I said. "Suppose we continue our engagement, dear, and don't tell anyone that for nine months I was another man's proxy?"

"And has it taken all this time to think it out?" she asked, her face still averted.

I gathered her in my arms.

"Isabel, Isabel!" I said.

She smiled up at me.

"Do you remember when you told me in the train about the other girl? It was then I realized the horrible mistake I had made, and that I was in love with my dear old proxy all the time."

"And there never was another girl—if I had only known—"

"Well, you know now,!" she said.

"Yes," I answered. "I am a wise man and a very happy one!"

BOUNCING THE BOUNCERS.

BY F. L. JOHNSON.

PICK out any magazine today, just reach blind-folded into a pile of them that hand out a little serious discourse in addition to the usual line of gravy about the pair who spent all the time quarreling, and then married and lived happily ever after, and examine the discourse. The writers of ten out of ten of them seem to have a grudge against something or other, and they proceed to tap it on the conch with their typewriters. They act as though somebody had sold them prune juice for the forbidden ambrosia.

These knockitects seem to go roaming about the country with a kit of tools consisting of an Underwood and assorted hammers. Whenever they see a humble nail sticking out of the body politic, they proceed to slam it even with the wall. It makes no difference whether or not someone wants to hang his coat on that nail, it must be hammered.

And those who aren't manually inclined pulled folks' whiskers instead of carpentering. For instance, how many times have the Bolsheviks been publicly spanked in our press when the paddle wielders didn't know Bolshevism from protoplasm.

Following my own advice, I'll cast disapproving eyes over the nearest magazine at hand.

Here is a party which makes a noise like an indisposed cat because the people didn't manifest a great desire to nominate their next-door neighbor or the corner drug clerk for the Presidency. He shakes a wicked hammer to the effect that the parties' candidates were chosen from too few men. Looks like he's doing ungentlemanly things to a windmill, to me. If anybody was very enthusiastic about having a certain man nominated, a petition with a few thousand signatures presented to the home delegates would turn the trick. They'd put him up for nomination. He'd be knocked down at a discount in all probability, but the supply of candidates is always in excess of the demand, anyway. Any more kicks? Yes, turn the page.

This bird has the crust to give a college education a sledge hammer treatment. The cooks left him in the pot too long; he's hard boiled. His chief knock is that at college a young fellow doesn't have a lot of old fogies around telling him that he doesn't know anything. If I am not mistaken, the profs do their best to drive that idea into the heads of the undergraduates, and if these professionals don't succeed, who can? Chorus: nobody but their wives.

And the anvil chorus continues for about 15,000 words more.

Now, I am not opposed to knocking on general principles. A well-handled hammer may do a lot of good when landed on the right spot on a transgressor's cranium. But I do wish our article writers wouldn't work the mallets overtime so much. A brass horn may not be as useful as a sledge hammer, but you have to hand out large fees and emoluments to get a man to use the one, whereas the public pays to hear the other.

Now some bright lad will probably arise to knock the knockers who knock the knockers.

A first-class imitation of a dog chasing its tail. Curtain.

"FAN'S LETTERS."

BY THE OLD CAPTAIN.

I RECEIVED two letters today; it was something unusual for me. I mean "letters"—not duns.

One letter contained the supposedly finished copy of a story that I had taken to her to be typed.

Her—is the young lady that I took it to, she was a fine young lady, and she could chew gum artistically. But you should see her stretch it, with her dainty fingers to get the real artisticity; but when I was through making corrections on the sheets, you would swear that the sheets had the "black measles."

But this is not the letter that I am going to try to tell you about, no—it was the other one.

It came to me "rolled," and I thought to myself, by all rights and the rules of the game; any one that would so far demean themselves as to roll a communication, jail was the proper place for him. Aye, a jail with iron bars. A jail with an iron door, a hard repulsive iron door, with a square hole in it, to push their bread and water through.

This letter came in a hard paper tube, and the tube itself was rolled in other paper, the ends carefully folded and sealed with red sealing wax, then stamped while the wax was still warm, with a fancy letter F with a round ring about it.

My nerves were quiet, and as I sat in the big easy chair after supper by the lamplight, I leisurely picked the sealing wax from one end, tore the cover down a little, took hold of the tube and slipped it out of the cover, tipped the open end down and struck it on my hand to slide the contents out, a delightful perfume came from the tube.

Huh, I said, and picked the letter from its case, unrolled it, and re-rolled it the other way, and laid it flat.

As I glanced at the heading, and then at the signature, I sat up straight, in surprise, "Why, it's from Fan; and I reverently laid it along my cheek.

"Fan"—was my sweetheart, let me see, forty, no fifty, and my mind figured swiftly back, sixty-seven, it was 1867. Fifty-three years ago, my, what an ocean of time, and Fan has remembered me, as I asked her to on parting, that miserable parting, all those long long years that have passed.

I settled back in my easy chair again. The better commenced: "My Dear, Dear—Hah, you think I'm going to tell you?

Never. No one; as long as the rivers flow, will I tell; you can cut my heart out with an ax, and even then I wouldn't tell.

After I had read the letter through three times, I laid it down on the table so I could glance at certain passages occasionally, as my thoughts traveled back—and back—and far back, to the time when I loved Fan.

This was a Christmas letter.

It was filled with beautiful thoughts it would be sacrilege to tell; and mixed with them would be a quiet gentle humor, so fine.

At last I awoke from that past, to the present. Aye, I'd bet my bottom dollar it that was, with its perfume; it was a work of real art, and was written with clean, jet-black ink, and yes, as I examined it closely, with a fine pointed gold pen, flexible to a touch, and capable of producing that delicate graduated shading, when the heart was in the hand that knew how to use it. And I thought, perhaps it might be the one that I gave her so many years ago as a Christmas present. Aye, I'd bet my bottom dollar it was; my very last bottom dollar.

Every line, every dot and dash, every little curly-tailed flourish, every letter, every sentence, every capital with its fine graduated shading, showed the gentle personality of the writer, and it all spelled Fan.

Why—it told it so plainly, that a blind man could see at a glance, that she was a handsome, lovable creature with gentle voice, and silver hair, and that she sat at the writing desk, while writing, with her lace-edged sleeves pushed back, while the lids of her beautiful eyes drooped as she looked down through the delicate gold-rimmed glasses as she wrote, and as some particularly pleasing sentence, or some thought that pleased brought the gentle smile, the pen smoothly ran it off, the dot for the period made, then the head would lift, the curtain lids would rise, and those good gray eyes would show in all their glory.

The personality contained in the writing of Fan's letter, showed gentleness, and it made me gentle also, and I laid my head back, closed my eyes and lived again, in that long, long past; and the time that I was courting Fan, stand out the clearest of all.

There was another fellow, of course there was, and often in the parks, we three walked and sat together by the lake. Arguments arose very easily between us two young men, we were fiercely jealous of each other, and very critical and at times the arguments grew very hot.

This displeased Fan, and she scolded us. But there came a time when in the argument the lie was given me, and as a gentleman should, I hauled off and smashed him in the nose, and the blood flew as he sat down suddenly in the grass.

Fan gave a scream, and hurried to him with her handkerchief ready to mop with. "Go get some water—you—quick—don't stand there so fiercely—go," she excitedly, angrily shouted at me.

And I went, slowly, and angry myself, to the little lake and dipped some water up in my hat, took it slowly back and set it down beside Fan, and Fan mopped that swelled bloody nose, and wrung out the handkerchief, then mopped again, while I looked moodily on, and as the swelling grew, and the black rings began to show in under his eyes, I caught the fellow's eye, he looked so woebegone that I laughed.

Fan turned at the laugh, arose to her feet, stepped over to me, shook her finger in my face and so, scornfully said: "You brute," and snapped her fingers under my nose.

"Go away, I never want to see you again," and she turned her back to me, dropped her face in her hands and wept.

I sullenly picked up my soaked hat, swung it to get the water out, then swung it again close to the fellow's face, and when the water from the hat hit him in the face he tumbled over backwards on the grass in fright.

I stepped over to Fan, put my hand on her shoulders, and sadly said, "Good-by, honey, I'm sorry for you. Kindly remember me just a little in the years to come, as I shall never see you any more. Good-by."

That was fifty-three years ago, and so many times I have wondered in that fifty-three years whether I was cowardly in going away and leaving the coast clear to the other fellow or whether I should have stayed and driven the other fellow off and wooed Fan, as the lion wooed his mate. but then it was a question whether Fan would be wooed "by a brute," but it is—as it is.

And now, at this forgivable Christmas time, Fan's beautiful letter, written by her own hand, aye, that same shapely hand that had mopped the blood from that swelled up bulbous nose, and I laughed softly at the remembrance, and reached slowly out, to pick up that beautiful letter to read once again its gentle wishes to me, pertaining to the blessings of Christmas, and as I drew the letter to me, I said in my thoughts, "I will go and see Fan, my Fan," and I brought the letter around in front of my eyes.

It was the wrong letter.

It was that typed monstrosity. That copy that the beautiful chewing gum expert had mangled with the brazen-faced, cold-blooded, disgustingly dirty type.

I threw it from me, far over in the corner behind the sofa. And to think that some people, especially editors, prefer that thing to this? And I picked up Fan's beautiful letter again, after carefully wiping my hands, and laughed unholily.

Is writing with a pen to become a lost art? Was this beautiful letter of Fan's simply a gem of the past? Oh—I hope not.

It was the pride, especially of the "southern ladies" in the lower States, and the Virginians were noted for their beautiful handwriting with a pen, and for their handsome stationery, and for the quaint courtliness of their letters expressed so delightfully grandiloquent, and when the gentleman of those times carried their stamp—their seal to press in the sealing wax—as a charm on their watch guard, or a ring on their finger, and the powdered ladies carried their seal at the end of their necklace of pearls as a pendant which in itself was a tiny pearl covered, beautiful thing and then again, in the time of Horace Greeley, which was my time also, I obeyed his command, "Go West, young man, go West." Ah—"There was a penman."—The Old Captain.

ISAAC JENKINSON-FRAZEE.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE RECRUITER.

BY R. W. BRAKE.

IN THE good old days when privateers sailed the seas and buccaneers lay in wait for the unsuspecting Indiaman homeward bound with the riches of the East, it was customary to recruit the crews for these daring exploits by sending press gangs ashore and knocking innocent citizens over the head and dragging them off to the ship where they were put in irons and held until they were far out at sea, when they were released and put to work. Sometimes these gangs were a little more considerate and would take a good husky country lad and show him a good time by filling him up with yarns about treasures and pretty girls and finally with the help of numerous horns of grog persuade him to go with them on their cruise for gold and fortune.

The press gang system was used even during the earlier days of the navy and was no doubt successful in many ways, but of course from the civilian standpoint it was never very popular.

As years passed on this method gradually became modified and in the natural course of evolution the idea of using force was changed to one of attracting men into the service by all sorts of alluring promises. The grog shop was still an important feature in the game and, in fact, any scheme short of actually clubbing a man over the head with a marlin spike was considered legitimate. Men on recruiting duty were dressed in the most attractive uniforms with all sorts of medals and chevrons and always had money in their pockets to buy a drink or a cigar for the unsuspecting victim.

With more or less variation this idea was followed in a general way for many years and a recruiting sergeant was always looked upon with suspicion. He was an uncertain quantity and it was dangerous to talk to him too long or to take a drink with him because he was credited with possessing great powers of persuasion and a man was liable to find himself signing papers and putting up his right hand when he really never had intended to do such a thing.

Recruiting officers were generally in the poorer part of town and were always the last resource of a man who had either had a fight with his wife, had been thrown down by his sweetheart or was hungry and broke.

Even in that way the recruiting office probably rendered a greater service to the community in which it was located than it was ever given credit for, and yet on this flimsy foundation was being built one of the most useful organizations that has ever been developed by the government. From the days of the old press gangs up to the present time has gradually grown a service that is respected and esteemed by everybody and the recruiting office of today is a valuable addition to any community in which it is located. It is an information bureau where civilians come to ask all manner of questions. Its members are fully informed on every subject in connection with the service which they represent. They are courteous, accommodating and willing to help in every way possible and whether a mother wants to find out when her son is coming home from France, or an ex-soldier wants to change his government insurance policy, or get his bonus or mileage or Victory button, it is all the same; they will all be given the help that they need.

And when a young man wants to enlist he is told exactly what to expect when he "joins up" with the service. He is advised where he can get the most good out of the time he puts into it and is not promised anything except that he can advance according to his own ambitions. If he is anxious to learn and to get ahead he will have his chance, and that is all any man can expect.

And so today we have the recruiter representing an organization that has become one of usefulness and service, not only to the government but to the people and to the community at large. The esteem in which it is held is often demonstrated when fathers and mothers bring their boys to the station and talk to the officers in charge in regard to having them enter the service. And there was a time, not so awfully long ago, when it was no uncommon sight for a fond parent to come to the recruiting office and swear vengeance on the sergeant and the whole army for inveigling their offspring from the shelter of the family roof.

Thus the times have changed. The army has become a great school where young men can learn trades, become physically and mentally developed under the most perfect system of instruction and fitted to become good and useful citizens. And the recruiting station and the soldier with the blue brassard on his arm is the medium through which he can gain all these opportunities. When you see him on the street go up to him and ask him about it. He will not get you in a dark alley and club you over the head or give you a drink and put you to sleep so you will wake up in a brand new uniform that you never intended to wear; he will just tell you all about the service and explain what you will get, what you will do and where you can go. And if you want to find out anything about insurance or compensation, bonus or mileage or, in fact, anything in connection with the service, he will tell you all he knows. Try it and see.

A New Way to Treat Colds

LACK of motor energy is the real cause of colds and grippe.

Wet feet, chill and draughts cause colds only when nerve energy is lacking. It is then that the membranes of the nose and throat become sluggish and offer a fertile field for the breeding of millions of cold germs.

Hyland's 14 restores action to these membranes. It acts directly upon the cause of colds—energizing the motor nerves and fortifying the system in a natural way.

Hyland's 14 differs vastly from the old time "cold and grippe cures" which physicians now condemn. It contains no quinine, no aspirin or other coal tar products.

Labor Logic.

PRESIDENT T. P. O'CONNOR of the Longshoremen's Association was defending strikes.

"How could men get better pay without striking for it?" he said to a New York reporter. "By asking for it, do you think?"

"I once knew a young book-keeper who went to his boss and asked for a dollar raise. The boss flew into a terrible passion.

"'But,' faltered the book-keeper, 'there is nothing unreasonable, sir, in my request. Don't you remember promising me a raise after I'd been with you a year?'

"'Yes, hissed the boss, "but don't you remember that I made the rise conditional on your giving me every satisfaction?'

"'Oh, dear! Haven't I satisfied you, sir?' said the young book-keeper pitifully.

"'Satisfied me?' yelled the boss. 'Do you think you are satisfying me when you ask for a raise?'"

Polite Rebuke.

WHEN, years ago, E. F. Benson's novel of "Dodo" made a sensation mainly through a rumor that his rather naughty heroine was Margot Tennant, the future Premier's wife, Mr. Benson took it on himself to send Miss Tennant a note denying that he had tintended to portray her in her novel that was the year's sensation.

Miss Tennant's reply to this note was:

"Dear Mr. Benson: Have you really written a novel? How amusing!"

Hard to Find.

DURING the war, while I was on leave of absence in Paris, relates a returned soldier I decided to take a walk alone. I thought it advisable to copy down the name of the street in which I was staying, so I wrote down some words printed on the sidewalk.

When I was ready to return I found that I could not locate the street where my hotel was, so I approached a woman, showed her what I had written in my book, and tried to learn from her where the place was. She laughed and said something in French, which, of course, I did not understand, and passed on. A number of times I did the same thing, and everyone I stopped laughed, and passed on until a man said in English, "What is it you want?"

Delighted to find that I had discovered one person who spoke English, I said, "That is the name of the street where I am staying, and I am lost. Will you please direct me?"

"You haven't written down a street name," said the man, "but 'post no bills.'"

In the Days of Gallantry.

LORD HOUGHTON (writes W. H. Mallock in "Memories of Life and Literature) was once sitting at dinner by the celebrated Lady E——, who was indulging in a long lament over the social decadence of the rising male generation.

"When I was a girl," she said, "all the young men in London were at my feet."

"My dear lady," said Lord Houghton, "were all the young men of your generation chiropodists?"

AN INSPECTOR of schools, giving a schoolmaster a little advice, referred to the importance of associating historical events with admonition.

"For instance," said the inspector, "here is an apt example: 'Don't play with matches. Remember the fire of London.'"

The teacher appreciated the idea, and, putting it into operation almost immediately, gave his class the key phrase, "Don't spit."

The children gazed at each other in obvious perplexity. Suddenly a bright lad's hand shot up.

"Well?" queried the teacher.

"Don't spit. Remember the flood."

Democratic.

VICE-PRESIDENT MARSHALL has found a new job for himself—a peddler of "dope." He told the story the other day to show how easily a Vice-President can appear in public without being known. He traveled through his own State, making speeches in the campaign, and this is what happened to him:

"I was seated in the smoking car, thinking out what I could say to help the Democratic party in a speech I was to make that night," said Mr. Marshall. "A large man slumped down in the seat beside me.

"'Mighty bad day for business,' said the stranger, observing the rain falling in torrents.

"'What's your line?'

"'Motor car accessories. What's yours?'

"'Peddling dope.'

"'I thought they wouldn't let you sell that stuff.'

"But I have a special arrangement with the administration for a short time yet.'"

Vice-President Marshall said that he supposed his train companion was telling the story throughout Indiana that the administration was giving special permission to sell "dope."

And that shows how far a Vice-President can fall.

Utopian.

CAPT. LINDSEY POLK, director of a number of hotels, said recently:

"European hotels, even the best of them, are inferior to ours. While I was in Paris I saw an advertisement of a fashionable new hotel and the boast the management made was that it was as good as the best American hotels. I was pleased with his tribute."

Capt. Polk smiled.

"Well," he resumed, "our ideals are high. No more hotel keepers like the old fellow who complained about his summer visitors.

"'You wouldn't believe the nonsense that is in them. They are always wantin' a clean tablecloth, an' clean sheets to their beds. An' table napkins, no less! I'll tell you what, there are people in this world that think they can go into a hotel an' make a convenience of it.'"

The Usual Way.

THREE men had been murdered.

It was one of the worst crimes in recent years.

Henry Horsecollar, the eminent personal deduction detective, was called for immediately. To watch this great man work was a pleasure to one and all.

There were many clews. A doughnut with a bite out of it was found on the front sidewalk. There was a thumbmark on the flagpole on top of the house. An old woolen shirt hung on the fire escape of the next house.

A beautiful young lady was seen passing the house of mystery on her way to the subway. The people next door had corned beef and cabbage for dinner on the day of the crime. A man down the street had bought a pianola two days before the crime.

In fact, there were a thousand clews—so many of them, in fact, that it took the great detective so long to clear them all up that people had forgotten about the crime and he had to give it up himself.

A WASHINGTON reporter, happening to pass the St. Elizabeth's Hospital for the Insane, noticed an inmate standing and painting a wall with a dry brush. The reporter, somewhat of a sportsman, noticed a racing sheet in the back pocket of the painter and thinking to have a little fun, he said:

"Who are you picking today?"

"Take little Eva in the fourth race at Laurel," said the painter. "She's a 200 to 1 shot and she's carrying eighty-eight pounds; she can't lose."

The reporter, perhaps thinking one hunch as good as another, went down to the office, drew out $25 advance salary and put it all on Little Eva. Then Little Eva stumbled on the first quarter and was out of the race.

About two weeks later the reporter was passing the hospital and he again noticed the painter, busily painting with the dry brush.

"Well," he said to the painter, "I put $25 on Little Eva, at 200 to 1, carrying eighty-eight pounds, in the fourth race. She stumbled on the first quarter and lost."

"You took my tip," said the painter.

"Yes," said the reporter.

"Get a brush," said the painter.

"What is meant by regeneration?" asked the divine.

"Why, it's just being born again," replied the victim with some maternal prompting.

"Boss, the music was stranke to me tonight, an' I ain't jest shore of it yet; but jest you wait till tomorrow night and yo' ain't gwine to hear any of them fiddles at all!"

"Yes; I know you merely want to say. And I merely want to say that it's a shame that this household is always in a state of upset. Other women manage to keep their servants. Why can't you?"

LAW founded on the Bible is good enough for Mayor Gilmore of Morgantown, W. Va.

A local man charged with not having the tail light burning on his automobile was arraigned before the Mayor, who assessed a fine of $3.

The accused protested, said it was a poor law under which he was fined and that he did not think it would hold water in court.

The Mayor declared any law founded on the Bible was good enough for him. The defendant said he couldn't see where a tail light had anything to do with the Bible. The Mayor looked pityingly at the accused, and said:

"Do you remember the tale about the ten virgins, five of whom had lights and five of whom didn't? Well, if you do, you will remember that the Lord wouldn't have anything to do with the five without lights, and neither will this court."

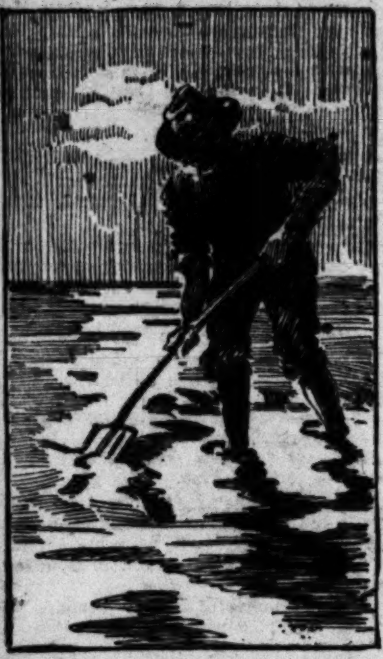
The Village of the California Clamdiggers.

BY JERRY EMERSON.

PAGE Joseph C. Lincoln and all the other Yankee yarn spinners whose pens have turned out phrases in description of a Cape Cod fishing village. I have found for them a western rendezvous. Lying along the Pacific, midway between San Francisco and Los Angeles and just below the bay of San Luis Obispo, there is an exact likeness of a Lincolnesque coast town.

My discovery was an inadvertent one. Jamison and I had been East and during our trip he was given important papers to be delivered on our return to a clam-digger, a dweller in a California fishing village. It had a dull sounding to us who were accustomed to the romance and historical significance of Santa Barbara, Monterey or myriads of smaller towns with their picturesque plazas and adobe walls. But on our arrival in San Francisco, we decided to stop on our way south and see the clam-digger, leaving on the next train to complete our journey.

For miles before we reached the place, we traveled through typical California inland country with low-lying hills spread with orchards, and pasture lands dotted with scrub oaks. Then from behind these hills we came upon sand dunes—small mountains themselves and in a moment we were at our station.



There is Nothing Spectacular About Clam Digging.

Bags in hand, and the sound of the receding locomotive in our ears, Jamison voiced the impression that the first sight of the place forced upon us.

"Well, are we on Cape Cod? This is a regular Joseph Lincoln kind of a town!"

And the kinship was there although a breadth of continent lay between the two spots. There at the station on the town's edge, was writ large upon its face what it was.

It lay inert and spatulate, unmindful of its Puritan incongruity, a long white beach, pimpled with weed-covered dunes, stretching down to the sea; flocks of ubiquitous sea gulls in the air or skimming the waves; and back from the beach a little, but touching the white sand's edge, was a marsh grown thick with coarse grasses. In the distance, sandy roads ran back to low hills and up and down were scattered the dwellings of the clam-diggers.

"Oh, I like it, Jamison!" I cried turning from my survey, fascinated with what it had revealed. "Let's stay over for a day."

And he, who pretends to scorn romance and to have no interest in strange towns beyond the prospect of a good restaurant and a comfortable bed, led the way willingly enough to the unpretentious-looking hotel. (It turned out to be a boarding-house, another New England touch.)

I will explain in passing, that the meals were good and the beds better than they promised. Otherwise Jamison, who remained there with me two days, docilely and without urging, will be convicted of the romantic disposition which he scorns.

Our train left us there at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. It was about 5 o'clock when we left the hotel for a short walk before dinner [illegible]—the town has no streets—runs north. Under our feet was heavy sand, mixed with broken particles of seashells. Along one side for a wind break was a row of eucalyptus trees. Through these and between the dunes we caught glimpses of the ocean. The sun was already lowering—ready for setting—and the sky had the softened tone that comes at the end of a summer day. The houses of town lay to our right toward the hills.

"And this," I breathed, turning to Jamison, "is in California—!"

"You've said it," he answered succinctly but understandingly. "Come on, let's go down on the beach."

Behind the dunes at the edge of the beach, the town was obscured, as a moment before from the main road, the water had been. Overhead the sky was red from the reflection of the sun. The tide was washing high and fair, there were whitecaps on the waves. Jamison found us a seat on an abandoned boat—almost hidden with kelp—and we sat serenely, as behind us the town lay serene, and watched the twilight come.

"It's a strange thing," Jamison, in some moods likes to philosophize although he usually hates himself afterward, "how a man's occupation will make his environment. Here's a town developing characteristics which entirely estrange it from the towns surrounding it, because a group of men, following the same occupation, choose to make it their headquarters. Judge it by other places near by and you'd say that logically it couldn't be. It almost seems as if it had been picked up from New England and set down here ready-made. Yet take it alone and every single condition might logically be expected."

"I've been up the coast scores of times and yet I never knew, until they told me up at the hotel, that the clams they get here are famous. The tourist hotels in the north and south are all supplied from this speck on the map."

If Jamison hadn't gotten hungry—his appetite would never allow him to lose himself far in anything—I would have had lost all trace of time.

We finished dinner at 7 o'clock and low over the ocean the fog was beginning to come toward the beach. We sat on the board sidewalk in front of the hotel for an hour and watched the town change under the approach of night.

There was a bright disc of a moon and by 8 o'clock banks of fog were crowding low on the beach and streaks of it lay across the sky. The mist was in our faces and from up the coast a fog-horn was sounding lugubriously. The sky finally became obscured with fog and the moon hurtled as though it were a ball thrown by some hidden hand, until at last it settled, a bright spot in the gloom.

I wanted to go down to the beach again, but Jamison was beginning to feel sleepy from the effect of the air or his walk through the heavy sand, and he refused. The fog and queer light of the moon had brought to my mind such imaginings that I was afraid to go among the dunes alone.

In the charm of the place, we had forgotten the clam-digger whom we had come to see, until at bedtime Jamison came upon the papers he had brought. Tomorrow, we decided, would be time enough.

I was up early the next morning, but not in time to see the clam-diggers come in. As a matter of fact, I didn't know they worked at night until Jamison joined me later. He had been talking to the hotel proprietor.

"It seems the old chaps go out about an hour before low tide," he explained as we walked along the beach, "while the water is receding and work until it starts in again. They work at night so their clams are ready for the trains that go through in the afternoon. The fork they use for digging looks like a garden spading fork, only the two outside tines are longer and the handle is short. It is all the equipment they take except a sack to put the clams in."

The fog was gone by 9 o'clock and the stiff wind was sifting the sand in eddies, until along the dunes it had hollowed craters with sharp edges.

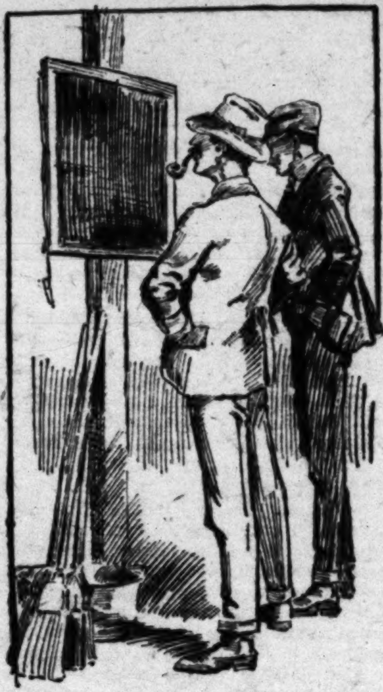
"If only there was a girl in yachting costume somewhere in the foreground, what a magazine cover this would make!" I said to Jamison. All [illegible] perfect coloring for an idealized marine painting of the beach on a bright day. The sky, washed clear by the passing fog, was a deep blue, the sea and the grass of the marsh were green, white foam was riding the waves far out, and against these colors, the sand seemed white with a bisque tinge.

Although we had almost forgotten that a search for a clam-digger had brought us to the town, we did at last start out to find him, and at the suggestion of the landlord we went down to make inquiries for him at the store.

"This yer's a-shiftin' population," the storekeeper told us. "I don't rightly place the digger ye describe but he's yer, like as not." And thereupon he made a suggestion that amazed us.

"The likeliest way to git in touch with him, is to put a notice on that there board ye see behind ye, sayin' who fer and what fer. The diggers all come in about 8 to git their mail. Yer man, providin' he's yer, 'll see it. Ye kin take notice there's a right smart o' writin' on there a-ready."

And sure enough, there was a "right smart of writin'" on it. Attention was called to articles lost and found, for sale, and the Methodist Church called upon people to remember the Sunday services. There were one or two personal notices such as we contemplated.



And, Sure Enough, There Was a "Right Smart of Writin'" on It.

For nothing in the world would I have foregone the experience of that village bulletin board. And it is my opinion, Jamison was quite as keen. He wrote his message on the back of one of my cards, asking the clam-digger to come up to the hotel, and I pinned it on the square of burlap with the others.

"That's the first time I've bulletined anybody since I left college," Jamison said as he watched me.

The storekeeper seemed to think he should explain further.

"This yer's a small place and the diggers don't take much to telephones, and seein' as how the newspaper's only a weekly, there ain't no handier way than that there notice-board. They all come down fer mail any-how."

"And yesterday morning, we were in San Francisco!" I said weakly to Jamison.

At the station ready for shipping were the clams caught the night before neatly sacked and labeled. On each label was the weight of the sack's contents; the name of the shipper and that of the customer. From those labels we verified what the hotel proprietor had told Jamison. On them were the names of leading hotel grills and meat markets in San Francisco and Los Angeles. By midnight these places would have received their share of Pismo clams.

Across the road from the station we saw for the first time a sort of notion store. It had no sign and the proprietor did not deign to display his name, but he had painted in black across the rough weather-boarding:

"If U Want Anything, Buy it Here."

A horse harnessed to an English dogcart was tied before the hotel and I pointed it out to Jamison.

"There's the rest of the picture," he said as he looked. To one side of the horse lay an English hunting hound.

"Let's go for a ride," he suggested suddenly, grinning.

"In what?" I asked and looked about me wonderingly, at the same trying to think of an excuse, in case he should want to take an automobile ride. Somehow that seemed out of the picture, and besides the roads were abominable for that kind of travel. (I put in that last to help Jamison keep up his belief that he is entirely practical.)

"In that dogcart," he answered, and then to spare me the question I was about to ask, he went on: "It belongs to the man at the hotel and I know he'll rent it. Probably he'll throw the dog in. Will you come?"

I accepted, although had Jamison—brought up in the city and without even country-bred relatives—offered to take me riding behind a horse on any ordinary occasion I should have found good reason to refuse.

Perhaps a dog cart and an English hunting hound seem out of place in the picture, but they were a part of the town as we found it. My sensation, as Jamison guided the horse down the road that led among the high dunes and then turned her up the beach, was the climax to which all previous ones had been but contributing incidents.

The packed sand made easy traveling and fortunately the horse was the kind that needs no driving.

"Just four miles about here," Jamison said as we rode along, "is the lower end of San Luis Obispo Bay. According to the man at the hotel, this town on the lower end is a summer resort where the people come from the valley behind the coast range. At the upper end is the harbor where the ships come to bring and take away freight for San Luis Obispo."

We only went a short distance up the beach and were back to the hotel by lunch time. The sun lay hot over the town with an eye-aching glare. It looked less interesting now than it had in the early morning or at twilight the evening before. I took a nap in the afternoon and Jamison waited for the clam-digger.

India Religious.

India is said to be "the burning heart of Asia." That is to say, it has a genius for religion that is unsurpassed. Of the four great faiths which had their genesis in Asia, three were born in India. It is a land of 147 languages. Some of them are spoken by only a few people, but there are ten of these languages, each of which is spoken by 10,000,000 or more. Of every 100 people in the world eighteen live in this one land. The latest census of India gives that land 318,132,537, 4,500,000 of them being mendicants, or holy men.

The cobblers of Jerusalem are beginning to fear that the advance of civilization has robbed them of their livelihood. In the old days when the pavements were rough there was plenty of work for them, but the English government has, among other things, greatly improved the roads of the country, with the result that the shoes last longer. —[Indianapolis News.

BY WILLIAM ALMON

It was because he was not afraid of her that John Selden was attracted by Beatrice Ross in the beginning. Selden carried diffidence to an absurd length. He was abominably shy. Self-conscious at best, he really suffered when girls noticed him. He saw mockery in their eyes when they regarded him; he heard scorn in their laughter; was sure, always, that their laughter was directed at him. And it was just because his need of friendship, of companionship, was so great; because women, in his eyes, occupied so high and sacred a place, that they were able, by their mockery, to hurt him so keenly.

He had some reason for thinking they were laughing at him. He was very tall and loosely built, and he stooped a little, as many tall men do. He never knew what to do with his hands, and his near-sighted eyes were always making him stumble and trip. If you looked at him closely you saw keen eyes behind his glasses; shrewdness and a hint of humor about his mouth; strength in his jaw and chin; a fine sort of sensitiveness in all his features.

But girls like those who thronged the building in which he worked were not given to probing beneath appearances. They saw in Selden a man painfully lacking in assurance; ungainly; affecting an indifference to them their instinct told them he did not feel. They saw that he was afraid of them. Some of those girls, and Beatrice Ross among them, knew that he was regarded as a coming man; that the great telephone organization had brought him to New York because of his skill in solving the problems arising in a congested district like lower New York, where one building may use as many telephones as some small cities. But most of them never thought of him except when they happened to see him, and then they were amused, and a little scornful.

He grew conscious of Beatrice Ross rather slowly. She was Markham's secretary, and he had to see Markham often. He had to wait outside his door, sometimes, and when that happened he would be alone with her, and from time to time, too, she came to his room, with reports or papers.

Her eyes, as he met them, were always kind. Perhaps the first real thought he had about her was that he didn't mind turning his back to her; that he was not afraid that she would laugh at him as soon as he did so. In the corridors he was always coming upon little groups of girls. He could hear them giggling a long way off; then, as he neared them, the giggling would be hushed, and they would all look at him. They gained boldness from one another; half a dozen girls, together, would stare him out of countenance, when any one of them, alone, would pass him with downcast eyes.

He hated having to pass one of these groups. His cheeks grew red; his back stiffened. He had to make the same sort of effort that is called for from a man who, wearing a silk hat, must walk by a group of boys on a snowy day.

That he never saw Beatrice Ross in one of those giggling groups may have been due to chance; certainly she did not hold herself aloof from the other girls. Yet he felt that she was not like them, and, by slow degrees, her figure worked itself into the tissue of the dreams that helped to make his lonely life endurable.

Save for the year during which he had lived with Oskison Selden's life in New York had been solitary to an extraordinary degree. He and Oskison, mutually abhorrent of the boarding-house in which they met, had pooled their resources and taken a floor in an old house in a shabby quarter of the city, where rents were low. He had enjoyed his intimacy with Oskison for a year, then Oskison had married and gone off to live in a suburb. Selden had kept the place; the thought of another boarding-house experience had been intolerable.

Yet he was not misanthropic. It was only his shyness that shut him away from the life that cried out to him. He longed for companionship; envied Oskison profoundly, his ease, his faculty for making friends. He wanted to know women, to enjoy their friendship, as men like Oskison did. And he had dreams of marriage, too, and a real home. Those girls, seeing through the pretense of his indifference to them, were right. He dreamed of a girl who should never mock him, with look or laugh.

Oskison, when he lived with Selden, tried to conquer that shyness of his, and failed. He was always trying to draw Selden along into his own vivid life. But, though he could lead his friend to water, he could by no means make him drink.

Now Beatrice Ross stirred him, touche him. She had a rival, a predecessor; there was another figure, vague, impalpable, in Selden's dream life. But all the advantage was hers. For he saw her every day; her living presence was a part of his life. He never suspected it, but many of those giggling girls he hated would have been willing to fill the place Beatrice was coming to hold in his mind; his aloofness interested them, and almost any one of them might have touched him, as she had done. They lacked the wit to divine the way, that was all. That wit she chanced to possess; the cunning, the shrewdness, whatever you please to call it, that could help her to fulfill her purpose.

In her, as in Selden, nature was at work. For her the office was only a means to an end. She dreamed of ease, security, a home in which she should be mistress, a man bent to her will, providing for her. In Selden she saw such a man. She knew what Markham thought of him and his future; knew she could count upon his prospects. Love? . . . Did she think of that. But what was love, save marriage with a man one could depend upon, a safe man, sound, and with his future assured?

Selden's advances were timid, reluctant, hesitating. They fell into speech during those times when he had to wait for Markham. And then, one day, he asked her to lunch—and for the next two weeks, avoided her as much as he could. Later she began to talk of a play that was being much discussed and that she had not seen. Suggestion worked upon him; one night they dined together and saw the play. And that was the beginning of intimacy. He met her quite often. After that, as he was leaving the building, it was natural enough that they should go uptown together.

More and more that vague figure of his dreams assumed her form; the woman he should love, the mother of the children for whom he longed. And yet, when he was with her, when some strong part of him urged him to take her in his arms, to hold her, possess her, an instinct checked him, held him back.

Doubts assailed him always just when he was most certain that he loved her. It was not Beatrice he saw then, the living, tangible Beatrice, but the figure of his dream, in her image. And in such moments, as he tried to give it fixity, it lost her semblance. Blue eyes were changed to brown, light hair to dark. For her substance a phantom of his memory was exchanged, tormenting him, maddening him, filling him with an impotent anger against his folly.

There was a hot night in the early summer when they rode long and far upon a bus top. They sat close, silent, worn out, their bodies touching. The river was murky in the haze the day's heat had left; the mist dimmed the reflection of the lights upon the water. He felt the yielding of her body as it pressed against his own, the soft surrender of her hand, stealing into his. He had only to put his arm about her, draw her to him . . . her lips awaited his touch. For all his shyness he was sure, that night.

Yet he waited. Her eyes were wide, later, as he stood with her at her door. Her hand was in his; her lips were parted; she drooped a little; swayed toward him. He cried out; uttered a hoarse, choked sound; caught her to him. His lips were over hers. And then, as she threw back her head, he broke away from her, almost pushed her from him. He could remember, afterward, what he had said:

"Good-night, Beatrice. My head aches—it's the heat."

While she had been in his arms, yielding to him, she had assumed another form. The eyes of his spirit had seen another woman in her place, and he had recoiled, as from a sacrilege. Sacrilege it would have been, indeed, to touch that other woman's lips while he was moved as Beatrice had moved him; while the passion she had roused was his master. . . .

Yet, later, in the hot darkness of his room, it was for Beatrice he longed; for herself, not the creature in her image who moved through his dream.

He roused himself; sat up in bed; stared into the darkness. How great fool he was! What stood between him and what Beatrice offered him? The memory—of a memory! It was no more. He had not even the shadow of reality to build upon. A girl he had met once; slim, tall, dark haired, brown eyed; a girl, kindly, gracious. . . .

Once he had seen her. But he remembered. . . . He had come home unexpectedly that night and found the house full of Oskison's friends. She had tried to teach him to dance; she had laughed with him, not at him. Oskison, amused, touched, perhaps, by his interest in her, had given him the chance to take her home. They had set out to walk a little way; later a hansom passed them, and they had taken it, and talked together all through the long, slow ride.

The memory of that talk was with him yet. They had spoken of books, and music, and great paintings. Lightly she had revealed to him things unsuspected; he had been finding treasures of beauty ever since in the paths in which she had set his foot that night. He began to tell her tings about his secret thoughts. . . . They came to her home too soon; a great house that spoke, with a crushing eloquence, of the gulf that stood between them. Yet she had asked him to come to see her, and he had said he would.

He had walked home, through the sleeping city. Her fragrance had been in the soft air of the night, the echo of her voice in the wind murmuring among the trees in the park, the light of her eyes in the distant stars. . . .

But he had not gone to see her. She was rich; he had had his way to make. Only in dreams could she and he be together, dwell in the same world. And now there was Beatrice. . . .

He could remember Oskison, rallying at him, laughing at him, next day. And how Oskison, growing serious at something he saw in his eyes, had urged him not to fear his instincts, his desires.

"Don't be a fool, Jack," he said. "You're fit to tell any girl alive you love her—if you do. And it's only in books that people let money and the lack of it mess up their lives. Remember Emerson? 'Hitch your wagon to a star?' Suppose she's your star? Find out!"

He had tried to silence Oskison by scoffing.

"Old Emerson knew what he was talking about," said Oskison, ignoring him. "That's the best sort of advice. But—Lord—who takes it? It's hard to catch your star and bridle it. And so we take old Dobbin. He's always there waiting to be harnessed, glad to be taken."

He was remembering things that had not been in his mind for months. Strange—the way this new longing for Beatrice evoked such memories! Beatrice . . . yes, now there was Beatrice. He could hitch his wagon to her star. Oskison had not thought of that. There might be stars and stars. It needn't be a choice between Dobbin and the star.

He was with Beatrice again a week later. Again it was hot, and after dinner they walked over to the park and found a slope, under some trees, where they were nearly alone. The murmur of other voices came to them, but none was near. She stole within the shelter of his arm. Her head sank down upon his shoulder. He stirred; drew away from her a little.

"I'm so tired!" she said, and sighed.

His arm tightened a little about her; he answered the appeal of her weariness. She needed him, as he needed her. In that moment everything about her that was beautiful and fine was uppermost in his mind. She offered him herself—and it was so great a thing. . . . Love, tenderness, an end of loneliness and doubt. . . . She stirred in his arm; he looked down, and saw her face, upturned; her drooping lips. He bent swiftly, and their lips met. Her arm stole up; drew his head down.

Later, much later, a long sigh shook her. She lifted timid, trusting eyes to meet his troubled look.

"Jack," she said. "Jack—dear——"

He Hated

He kissed her again. But she must speak.

"Jack, I suppose we'd better not tell anyone—right away."

She waited. He said nothing.

"That we're—engaged——"

She could not read his eyes. For just a moment it was in his mind to break away from her. He had not spoken; he was not bound. It was in his power, still, to free himself. But then he crushed her in his arms; he kissed her hungrily.

"I suppose not——" He answered her at last. "But—oh—not now—don't talk about that now."

She was quiet, for a space, yielding her lips to his. But soon she spoke again.

"If we have to wait, let's not tell any one until just before we can be married. People talk so about a long engagement——"

He shrank from such talk. But she was content. His silence did not trouble her. In her eyes there was a new look. He did not mark it. To him, too, content had come, with his surrender. New depths in him were stirred. He looked upon her with the pride of achievement in his eyes. It was as if his conquest of her had set him in his place among men. He was like a knight who had newly gained his spurs.

For a time he was happier than he had ever been. It was very wonderful to know that she was his. She filled his mind, as her soft body filled his arms. The memories that had tortured him departed. He lived in and for the moment, idyllic, satisfying.

After a little time Beatrice stirred; she began to press him, gently, with her questions. He had things to tell her; a tale of debts he had assumed after his father's death, which had followed a long and costly illness; of other debts, contracted to pay his college expenses. He was nearly free. But she was not quite satisfied.

"They couldn't have made you pay those debts of your father's, Jack, could they?" she asked.

He admitted that. But she must understand; his honor was involved.

"Oh, yes, perhaps," she said. "But it didn't matter when you paid them. You needn't deprive yourself of things. You could wait until you could spare the money easily."

He was stiff about that, though; they stopped talking about it. But, if she abandoned a direct assault, she was by no means done. Already, she began to let him know, there was talk about them. Our secret, so far as the office is concerned, is an open one," said she.

"They've seen us together, silly," she said. "Madge Johnson was at Rockaway that day. Tilly Jones saw us at the theater. And Effie was having dinner at that French place last night. Can't you see they'd all be sure to talk?"

"Well—suppose they do?" he said, impatiently.

"They keep asking me questions. It's rather hard, Jack. If I say we're not engaged they'll either not believe me or wonder why I go around with you so much. And if I tell them we are they'll want to see my ring——"

He hadn't thought of a ring. But after that she kept the thought before him, skillfully, without actually speaking of it again. She was patient; she made it plain that she kept the thought before him, her; that she could not hide from him. Until one day he spoke of it himself.

"Suppose we pick out a ring, Bee," he said. "I was looking about—I oughtn't to spend very much for it, I'm afraid——"

She clapped her hands.

"You darling!" she said. "As if I cared how much it cost! It's what it stands for——"

They went, at lunch time one day, to a shop not far from the office, and he showed her, in the window, some rings, with small stones, in simple settings.

"They're the ones I asked about," he said. "The stones are good. They're small, of course——"

"They're lovely, Jack," she said, doubtfully. "But—I don't know—perhaps we'd better wait, dear——"

"You don't like them," he said. He was keenly disappointed.

"Oh, yes—they're lovely," she said again. "But—oh, it's so hard for a man to understand! Girls are so horrid—they'd say such mean things——"

He turned away. And two or three days later, when they were walking in Fifth avenue, she paused outside a jewelry store of a very different sort.

"Look, Jack," she said, shyly. "Isn't that a stunning ring?"

He looked at the ring to which she pointed.

"Yes," he said, in a flat voice.

"It was silly of me," she said. "But, Jack. —that's the ring I had picked out for myself! It's much too expensive, of course—but that was when I was just dreaming—before I understood——"

He turned, abruptly, toward the door.

"Jack, where are you going?"

"In there—to get that ring. Come along, Bee."

"Jack, dear; I didn't mean that—you mustn't——"

"I know what I can do," he said, curtly. "Come on."

The ring had to be altered to fit her finger; it was promised for the next day. He winced a little after he had written his check and subtracted the amount from his balance. But after all, Beatrice was right; he could take his time to pay those old debts, considering that he was not legally bound to pay them at all.

Two days later the office saw the ring on Beatrice's finger; girls buzzed about her; men came up to Selden and congratulated him. He glowed a little; was glad he had bought the ring. He cut down some of his own expenses; tried to make up, as best he could, for the extravagance of its purchase. But, before long, Beatrice spoke again of the way the girls were talking. They were wondering now about the wedding.

"They're at me all the time," she said. "They want to know when I'll be leaving, and where we're going to live. And where we'll go on our wedding trip. Jack—can we—could we go to Bermuda?"

"All right," he said, indifferently. If she could talk so of something sacred—a rite. . . . "And I thought we might keep my old place for a while. There's lots of room——"

She cried out.

"Oh, Jack—we couldn't! In that neighborhood! No one nice lives there! It's all right for a man, of course. I thought—why—we'll have to have an apartment uptown! I suppose we couldn't manage Riverside drive—not at first. Though if you go quite far up the rents aren't so bad—and it's such a good address——"

He stared at her, in speechless vexation. She was not stupid; he knew that. Why wouldn't she understand? Couldn't she see the way she was pushing him into one unwarranted expenditure after another for the sake of appearances?

"You don't know how girls talk in an office like this!" she said. She, too, was angry; she convicted him, too, of an almost criminal lack of understanding. "It wouldn't be much worse if I kept on working after we were married—and you know what people say when a girl does that—what they think of her husband!"

"But, Bee—look here—what difference does it make what a lot of silly girls say?" he asked. "I've tried to explain things to you. I've been paying old debts—except for that I'd have some money saved by now. I'll be clear pretty soon. But we've got to get ahead—we can't spend everything we have, right at the start. I don't care what people say."

"Well, I do," she said, hotly. "So does everyone. I bet you do yourself, really."

He shook his head, rather hopelessly. Beatrice was soft; she was yielding. Yet he was conscious of the curiously inflexible quality of her will. She had a way of concentrating her desire upon some object, insignificant in itself, perhaps. And no matter what obstacles stood in her way, she achieved her purpose. He had a prevision that it would be so in this case; that she would choose their home. And he was resentful.

Beatrice, indeed, was beginning to wear upon his nerves, in a multitude of little ways. She insisted on showing him off to her family. There were frightful, stiff dinners in the apartment where she lived with her mother and aunt. Those two never missed a chance, it seemed to him, to explain that they had once had money; that they had not always lived in the fashion to which fate had now reduced them. Beatrice, he gathered, was to retrieve the family's lost prestige. There was agitated talk, already, about the wedding; about Beatrice's gown, her flowers, the number of her attendants, the reception. It must be a grand affair with notices in the newspapers.

Selden loathed the thought of display at a wedding, and said so. Mrs. Ross chose to think he was afraid of the expense; she said, stiffly, that, no matter what sacrifice might be involved, her child should always be able to remember her wedding with pride. He had to disclaim a parsimonious motive, hastily.

"Very well, John," said Mrs. Ross. "Of course, if you really want to bear some of the necessary expense, my circumstances, which are well known to you, will not permit me to refuse."

He hated Beatrice's relatives. They made jokes that seemed to him to be in the most questionable taste; they asked him questions appallingly personal. They told him stories about her childhood; brought him, triumphantly, baby pictures of her. Oh, of course, if he had been in love with her—! Or even had he known that he was not . . .

He was curiously surprised to find, somehow, that the date of the wedding had been fixed, almost without his knowledge. He had been pushed to that, an inch at a time, as it were. He was quite helpless. Beatrice, in such matters, was almost terrifyingly efficient. As she marshaled the fact, he could not escape their logic. The reasons against delay were overwhelming. He felt as a man must who has stepped into a quicksand and feels himself being drawn down, deeper and deeper. . . .

He was about at the end of his tether when Jim Oskison asked him out for a week-end. Beatrice was resentful; she had been planning to exhibit him to still more relatives on Sunday. But he stood firm, for once. And Beatrice, who knew all about the Oskisons, considered the social value of their friendship and gave in.

He met Oskison at the station on Friday afternoon; he had decided to stay away from the office on Saturday morning.

"Lord—it's good to see you again, Jack!" said Oskison. "That's the worst of living out of town—you don't see the people you like best. We've got two of you for this week-end, though. You remember Marian Worth, don't you?"

"Yes, I remember her," said Selden, steadily. He wondered as he heard his own voice. The bare sound of her name had roused every memory he had ever had of her, restored their power.

"Fine girl!" said Oskison. "Jove—she rather bowled you over once, didn't she? Oh, well—there were kings before Agamemnon! I can remember a girl or two before Helen, if I try!"

He laughed. But Selden could not echo his mirth.

"You're taking the jump before long, aren't you?" Oskison said. "You might find out what the lady would like in the way of a wedding present, and let me know——"

Selden was wondering how he was to face Marian Worth. In the crisis he did very well. She had not changed. After all, though, it was not so long. Less than three years—and they seemed like thirty, as he looked back. Yes, he did very well. Some of his shyness had worn off; he had come to grips with life through Beatrice. He talked, lightly. But Helen Oskison looked at his eyes, and was troubled. She had always liked him.

Only once did the talk grow dangerous that night. He was alone with Marian Worth for a moment.

"You never came to see me, Mr. Selden," she said. "I always hoped you would."

He couldn't answer her. But perhaps she, too, saw his eyes . . .

In the morning he found Oskison, after breakfast.

"Jim," he said, "I'm awfully sorry. But some things—I'd forgotten them—afraid I'll have to get back to town——"

Oskison stared at him. The excuse was transparent. But the trouble in Selden's eyes was real.

"Too bad," he said. "I'll go over to the station with you—[illegible] [illegible] sorry. [illegible] thing I can do——?"

Selden shook his head. They walked to the station together in silence.

He went home. He had work there, and tried to do it. But his thoughts drove him out. He wandered about, aimlessly, for a time; sheer habit, in the end, took him to Beatrice. He had bridled Dobbin; better be done with thought of stars!

"I've found an apartment!" she cried. It was her greeting. "It's a darling—and the greatest bargain. It was the luckiest thing——"

He listened.

"On the Drive—and quite far downtown."

"How much?" he asked.

"There isn't another in the neighborhood that isn't at least $25 a month more! I've looked at them all. Only one hundred and fifty."

"O, come, Bee!" he said, wearily. "You know we decided——"

"I knew you'd say that!" she exclaimed. "But it's such a chance! Don't be stingy about this, Jack. Think of the address. Every girl I know will be dying of envy."

"That won't pay the rent," he said. "Bee, I wish you'd see the Oskisons. Her people have all sorts of money—she's used to everything. But they're living in a little bit of a house in the cheap part of a cheap suburb. They didn't care what anyone said. They wanted to get ahead and build for the future. And Mrs. Oskison's doing most of her own work——"

"Well—if you want me to be like that—with everyone laughing at me—and my hands rough and ugly—and living in a tenement——"

The quarrel flamed up, fiercely. Selden's tight nerves snapped. For the first time he said things that were meant to hurt. Beatrice went too far. She was playing with her ring; suddenly she stripped it from her finger.

"I won't marry you!" she cried. "Take your old ring! Why should I marry you? I can earn a better living for myself than I'd have as your wife!"

Selden's anger died. He was as cold as ice as he took the ring.

"I think you're right, Bee," he said, quietly. "I think we've hitched our wagons to the wrong stars——"

She stared at him. Alarm was in her eyes.

"Jack, I'm sorry; I didn't mean to be horrid. Don't be mad at me——"

"I'm not," he said. "You weren't horrid, Bee—you were just truthful. You'll find some chap who'll give you a good living just for marrying him. Only—I can't—that's not what I want——"

The stars were in the sky when he went out. He looked up. And it seemed to him that in one of those stars he saw the light he had seen in Marian's eyes, and that her fragrance was in the wind that blew across the little park he was passing, and the echo of her voice in its murmur among the trees.

A LITTLE TALK ON THRIFT.

BY S. W. STRAUS,
President American Society for Thrift.

IT IS of interest to note the plans now being discussed for means of utilizing the water power of the St. Lawrence River, which comprises one of the tremendous sources of unused wealth in the United States.

Few of the great nations of the world have at their command the resources which we either are neglecting to utilize or are wilfully wasting.

At the end of the war it was stated by competent government authorities that our waste land at that time comprised an empire six times as large as the State of New York. This estimate included some 300,000,000 acres of western desert capable of cultivation through irrigation; it also included 200,000,000 acres of cut-over timber land that must be cleared of stumps and brush. According to a statement made by Franklin K. Lane, then Secretary of Agriculture, all this land was capable of producing a higher crop value per acre than the majority of the agricultural land of the country. There are between 70,000,000 and 80,000,000 acres of swamp land which can be made productive by drainage and an additional 15,000,000 of arid acres which can be made productive by irrigation.

In connection with the St. Lawrence River water power conservation project, the development of 5,000,000 horsepower is said to be within the range of feasibility. Every horsepower thus developed, we are informed by statistics, will save ten tons of coal per year, while every twenty-five horsepower similarly made use of will save the equivalent of one year's labor for one man engaged in producing steam power.

In many parts of the nation, more particularly perhaps in the mountainous regions of the Northwest, there are vast resources of water power going to waste, which, if utilized, would greatly lessen the demands now made on our diminishing supply of coal and petroleum.

A more general application of the principles of thrift would add incalculable wealth to the resources of this country. Already blessed by nature to an extent far in excess of the opulence showered upon any other country, we have allowed sources of wealth beyond the dream of man go undeveloped.

It is important that we practice thrift as individuals and sooner or later it will become a matter of grave necessity that we as a nation practice it in the complete utilization of all our material resources.

ORANGE BLOSSOM TIME IS ALL THE TIME IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

THE PIGEON CLUB'S ANNUAL SHOW.

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California.

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON.

A California winter landscape.

THE slug question is one well worthy of attention, as it is most discouraging to lovers of horticultere, and to those growing vegetables either for private use or for sale, to find their efforts sometimes rendered useless owing to the depredations of slugs and snails. Numerous articles for the prevention and destruction of slugs have been published, but the advice here given has been mostly gained by a long personal experience. See that soils are properly drained and few hiding places left in which the slugs can secrete themselves. Keep the land as well stirred as possible, as this will be a sure way of destroying vast quantities, both old and young. Do not use stable manure unless well rotted, except for mulching, as there are now suitable artificial manures, which will fertilize the soil, and do not afford shelter for slugs. When digging land, especially heavy soil, give a good dressing of lime, as slugs dislike lime in any form.

Japanese Pinks.

From the many beautiful flowers that seedsmen name in their catalogues, it may seem difficult to select the most desirable. But considering the cost of seed, ease of culture, variety and beauty of bloom and the length of the blooming season, no one will deny that the Chinese or Japanese pink must have a place. Five cents worth of mixed seed will yield a surprising variety of both single and double flowers, ranging in color from pure white to the darkest crimson. Put them in the vegetable garden along with the beets and carrots. You might mix a very few early radish seed with the pink seed; these will be fit to use before they do any harm to the pinks. Then, if your garden is well tended, you will be delighted with blossoms nearly the whole year. If they are in the way, they will be all the better transplanted. Shake them to separate, and set them about six inches apart.

Sea Beans.

These highly polished beans are sold as curiosities. Tourists bring them home, sometimes considering them the product of the sea. They are washed ashore by storms and are collected and polished with emery, file and glass, and are almost as smooth and bright as agates. The real history of the large, hard, bright, oval "sea bean" is that it is the product of a vine, Mucuna urens, that grows in the West Indian Islands and tropical America. The beans are double convex and of a rich chestnut brown, with a yellowish margin where the two convex surfaces join. These beans will keep as long as ivory, and are sometimes mounted in gold or silver as souvenirs and ornaments. They come to our shores on the ocean wave, but are not marine plants.

Commercial Eucalypts.

W. T. R. writes: "When convenient, kindly write up the eucalyptus growing subject. I understand that many attempts have been made to grow them commercially here, or rather, along this coast. Has it been profitable? Or can it be made profitable near coast between Santa Barbara and San Diego? If prospect is good kindly advise how to proceed and give something of care, cost, growth of trees, market, selling price, etc. I have not been able to get any reliable or very intelligent information on the subject, and have no doubt (at least, I hope) that you have it all well digested and will kindly help me out."

W. T. R. is evidently a newcomer, for hundreds of pages of text and also of advertisement of promoters have been printed in local papers. The bubble has burst, and the sucker, "sadder but wiser," has sought new fields wherein to garner nebula for future Spanish castles. Eucalypts still are good old stand-bys for windbreaks, wood lots, fuel, etc., but their possibilities as a near-future timber supply are not seriously considered.

Alcohol From Umbrellas.

A French scientist, L. Rigotard, assistant at the Jardin Colonial, recently made a trip to Morocco, North Africa, where the Indian or Chinese lilac, Melia Azedarach, is much in use as an ornamental. This is the tree of which the dwarfer form is known to us as umbrella tree, an American garden sport from the Chinese tree. Our French investigator found the berries of this tree very rich in sugar, but poisonous; so that a fermented drink made from them would not be safe as a beverage. But they will yield alcohol, by fermentation and distillation, at least 10 per cent of the air-dried berries.

Mistletoes of the World.

The mistletoe of olden song and story is the one common to England and a large part of the continent of Europe, growing mostly on apple trees. To the botanist it is a viscum. In the eastern part of our country the only genus common is phoradendron and this also extends clear to California, though not in the same species. As we go west we find still others in Australia, not at all like any of those noted. In our mountainous district we have a leafless one growing on pines, which it much resembles; another on junipers. A study of the different mistletoes discloses the fact that the foliage of the different species closely resembles that of the host plant on which it is parasitic. The one on our local oaks has a similar leaf, those on pines have needles without leaves, while those growing on eucalyptus in Australia have sickle-shaped leaves like those of the average eucalyptus.

Lavender.

Lavender is an old-fashioned garden plant that should be more extensively used. It is easy to grow and is both useful and interesting. The dried flowers are used to fill sachets, and often placed in bureau drawers to perfume clothes and aid in keeping away insects. The flowers are distilled with alcohol and produce the commercial spirits of lavender.

Use of Shrubbery.

Shrubbery is mostly used as a frame to a lawn or other open surface and should be designed on similar principles to those of any other frame used to inclose and separate a composition of any kind from its surroundings. In other words, it should be designed on similar principles to those of the picture it incloses, with predominance of some particular motive, due subordination of parts and propriety of detail—if any. But the average shrubbery is put together with little regard to these cardinal principles; it is a thing of shreds and patches, particularly patches of shrubs striking in color or texture; it is made up of masses of the most showy bushes available with little regard to the effect of their size, shape, color, texture and position on the whole.

Morocco Fiber.

In a government report on fiber plants of Morocco, M. Barthe of the French Department of Agriculture states that the dwarf fan palm native to these parts, chamaerops humilis, has always been used by native workmen and "will be capable of furnishing abundant material for European fiber industries." This palm is very common and hardy throughout California, and though used as ornamental only, may also have an economic value. It thrives here on any soil and under all sorts of treatment. It makes more leaves annually than other species, which is promising from a fibrous point of view. When California seriously engages in fiber production, we may have commercial palm plantations.

The Wonderful Nepenthes.

The nepenthes are among the most wonderful of insectivorous pitcher plants, and one of the greatest wonders of the vegetable kingdom. The pitchers are born at the ends of the leaves and are filled with a digestive fluid that when analyzed was found to contain pepsin. Natives of Borneo use this fluid as a digestant. So many insects and small animals fall into and are assimilated by this juice that it is suspected the plant lives somewhat upon its victims. The aquatic wing of Golden Gate Park conservatory has for many years contained some fine specimens, and in Lincoln Park, Los Angeles, a few may be seen.

The Highest Capital.

When this is printed, Wilson Popence, Uncle Sam's frontier tropical fruit "detective" will be in Quito, Ecuador, which a letter from him states to be the "highest capital in the world, about 1[illegible].000 feet." He has been working south from Central America. When he will double back towards home we cannot say; far less may we predict what new fruits of value to California he may find—but here's hoping good luck will attend his efforts.

Long pruning applied to deciduous fruit trees has given good results in all parts of California and in many sections the former pruning practice of heading in and cutting back has been practically abandoned in favor of the new system.

These Los Angeles firemen are real gardeners.

Every Fruit Tree

IN KILLING VERMIN.

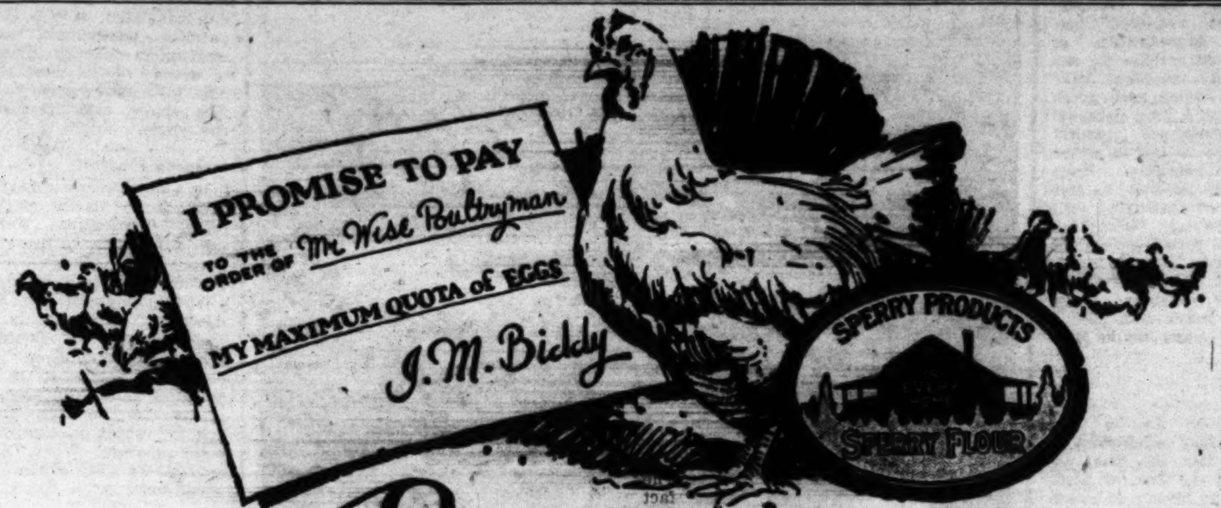
The following is a list of powdered substances that were found to be effective against chicken lice when used as dust: Arsenic trioxid, barium fluorid, barium tetrasulphid, borax, boric acid, cloves, naphthalene, paradichlorobenzene, sabadilla seeds, sassafras bark, sodium fluorid, flow- [illegible] considered of any practical value in the control of chicken lice. Arsenic trioxid is too poisonous; barium fluorid, cloves, sabadilla seeds, and paradichlorobenzene are too expensive, or not readily available in large quantities; naphthalene is dangerous if applied too freely, and barium tetrasulphid does not kill all the lice. Sodium fluorid is the most practical remedy given in this list, according to Department of Agriculture experts.

[illegible] found by the same authorities to be of no value against chicken lice:

Anguilla root, calcium carbonate, calcium fluorid, calcium hydroxid, calcium oxid, calcium sulphate, colocynth pulp, diatomaceous earth, dolomitic lime, eucalyptus leaves, ferrous oxid, flour, wheat, gypsum, hellebore, lime (air slaked,) lime (water slaked,) magnesium carbonate, magnesium oxid, magnesium silicate, orris root, quassia chips, road dust, silica, sodium bicarbonate, vermilion, yellow ochre.

[illegible] value shows the fallacy of the old theory that any fine powder is effective against chicken lice if dusted into the feathers.

"Shrinkage" in bulk carloads of potatoes averages 3 per cent. This amounts to 1200 pounds per carload. The "shrinkage" is less where potatoes are sacked, as this reduces pilfering and rough handling to the minimum.



I PROMISE TO PAY
TO THE ORDER OF Mr. Wise Poultryman
MY MAXIMUM QUOTA of EGGS
J. M. Biddy
SPERRY PRODUCTS
SPERRY FLOUR

Every hen in your flock is a "PROMISE TO PAY"

This hen means well enough. Chances are, she has the best intentions in the world. She is quite willing to own up to the fact that she is your debtor. You feed her. You take good care of her. [Perhaps you've raised her from chickhood.] And you devote your time to her physical welfare. In return for all that, you have every right in the poultry world to expect enough eggs to pay a healthy interest on your investment. But then—

Remember that even the best-intentioned hen won't "pay in full" unless the feed you give her contains the elements necessary for egg-building. Nature provides each laying hen with just so many eggs in embryo. And if you leave it to Mrs. Biddy she is apt to take six or seven years to produce her full quota of eggs. And, incidentally, she is apt to leave you high and dry in the process.

Your job, then, is to make Mrs. Hen "make good" her promise to deliver this amount of eggs in two or three years. And the biggest single help you can have is SURELAY. For it is SURELAY'S mission to make your hens pay by making them lay.

When we say SURELAY is the "cheapest" feed you can use, we mean just this: SURELAY will net you more in return for your feed-money than anything you can buy. You must realize that it takes more energy for a hen to convert poor feed into money than it does to convert good feed into money. What's more—there isn't such a heap o' difference between the cost of good feed and poor feed. But look at the profit-difference when you're through!

That's why thousands and thousands of wise poultrymen have come to bank on SURELAY. It contains the ingredients your hens need to make them profit-producers. These ingredients are balanced and blended more skillfully and economically than can possibly be done by hand. And SURELAY is always uniform—always the same—thanks to our daily laboratory tests!

If you want to see how SURELAY will help you "cash in" on all the "promissory notes" in your flock—simply clip the coupon below. In return you'll get a copy of our booklet, "Makes Hens Happy." It shows how to spur your flock into action and make 'em happy in the bargain. Send for it today—it's free!

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION

SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 16, 1921.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION.

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY.

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Tractor Section is the only farm journal in the west printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

The Marshall Plan.

A PARTIAL revelation of what may be done with the unused waters of California streams is contained in the ambitious Marshall plan, whereby the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys are to be watered by a series of canals and dams catching the waters of the rivers flowing to the great basin of Central California. The plan also includes the diversion of the waters of Kern River into Southern California, a scheme evolved many years ago as totally separate from any plan to water the entire San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys.

Before any such ambitious plan is given serious consideration by the State Legislature it should include a general storage and irrigation plan for the whole of the State. The scheme of irrigation should be extended to include the storage of waters of the San Gabriel and Mojave rivers and the Pacoima and other canyons whose flood waters, if impounded, would irrigate thousands of acres. When we get around to any such plan it should include as well participation by California in the storage of the waters of the Colorado River, an important project which would mean the irrigation of over 2,000,000 acres in California.

Inasmuch as Southern California ordinarily would be called upon to pay more than half the cost of this Marshall project, it seems only fair that the plan include the impounding and usage of the unused waters of the southern part of the State. Primarily the Marshall plan is a project for the utilization of the waters of Central California for the benefit of Central California, the cost to be spread over the entire State, and Southern California, as things now stand, would be called upon to pay more than her share of the cost.

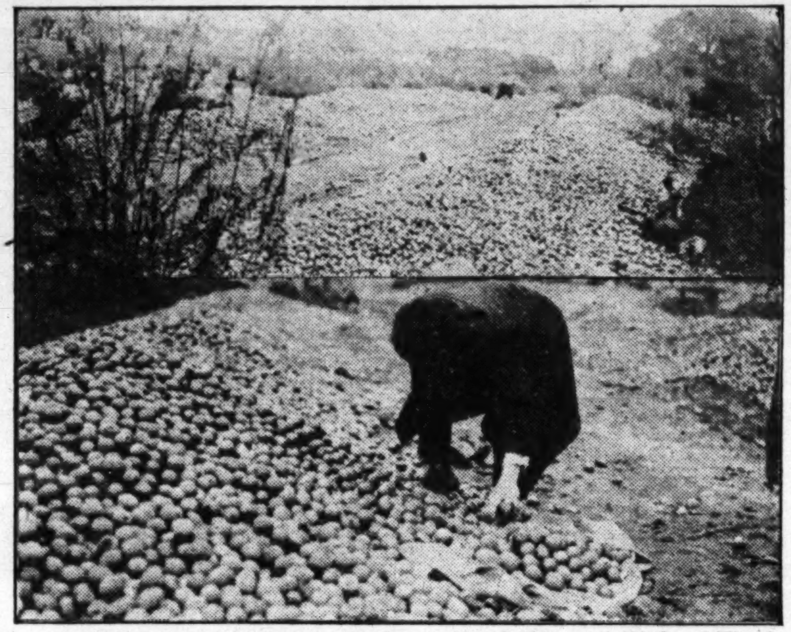
Testing Sea Route.

GROWERS of citrus fruits and the vegetable products for which Southern California is finding an ever-growing market will await with the keenest interest the announcement of the results from the first attempt made to ship oranges and lemons by boat through the Panama Canal to Atlantic Coast markets. Two thousand boxes of fruit were dispatched from Los Angeles Harbor for the eastern seaboard a week ago in the steel liner, Charles H. Cramp, of the Atlantic, Gulf and Pacific Steamship Company, a vessel specially equipped with refrigeration facilities for the coast-to-coast run. The trial shipment is being made by the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, which has been guaranteed a sailing time of fifteen days. Both refrigeration and ventilation methods for preserving citrus fruits are being tried out on the run and the Exchange expects to give the ocean shipping plan a thorough test. Great expectations from sea transportation to the other side of the continent were entertained by agricultural producers on the eve of the opening of the Panama Canal and before the war came along to sweep the seas of ships and disrupt ocean commerce. We are only now getting around to a real test of the possibilities the Panama Canal may hold for the growers of our perishable products.

Use the Water.

FARMERS who have an irrigation supply and do not use it to advantage at this time of moisture deficiency in the soil are likened by agricultural experts unto a family that is suffering from cold while a huge pile of wood stands unused at the back door. Students of conditions urge all who can get water to apply it to the land in large quantities, and frequently. Farm Adviser Hodgson, of Los Angeles county, who speaks for careful observers generally, says that even six inches of rain, with no run-off would not make up the deficiency of moisture in the average Southern California soils. Rains which have fallen thus far this season in the southern part of the State have only penetrated about twelve inches in favorable soils, he says, and trees will show the result of this drouth next season if water is not applied. Field crops, too, will show the effect of the moisture deficiency unless heavy rains come within a few weeks, or the ground is heavily irrigated.

This condition does not prevail north of San Luis Obispo. In Northern and Central California, in fact, more than the usual amount of rain has fallen, a direct contrast to conditions last year when in certain parts, at least, of Southern California the rainfall was around normal and the north suffered heavily from lack of rains. There is good snow storage on the mountains in the north and a fair storage in those of Southern California and it behooves the farmer and orchardist to soak his land with water if it is available.



Lemons Dumped in San Dimas Wash—A Tariff Editorial Without Words.

More Stock Needed.

IT IS to be feared that the farmers of the southwestern irrigated valleys will plant too much alfalfa this winter and in early spring on land which bore cotton last season. It is pointed out by careful observers that a surplus of alfalfa may result next year unless the live stock in Imperial, Palo Verde, Coachella and Salt River valleys is increased to consume a large portion of this feed. The cotton growers are thoroughly disappointed at market conditions, and their present tendency undoubtedly is to turn their cotton land back to alfalfa, because alfalfa during the last season has been scarce enough to make prices high. Here arises the danger that land may be planted to alfalfa to such an extent that by the end of next season the supply of alfalfa hay will be in excess of feed requirements.

It would seem the part of wisdom to continue to devote a fair proportion of the cotton land to this crop, notwithstanding the past season's experiences, as next season may see better conditions for the cotton growers. The very fact that so many are sick of cotton augurs for an improvement in this line.

An excessive alfalfa acreage should be avoided for the same reason an excess of cotton should be guarded against. The live stock population of the irrigated valleys mentioned is, largely because of the cotton fever, now below normal, otherwise the danger of overproduction of alfalfa would not be so great. The alfalfa crop is too bulky to be moved long distances to market. In general, the action most urgently needed in the valleys of the Southwest seems to be a great increase of live stock. More live stock raising is needed to put the Southwest on a wholly sound basis of diversified farming.

NO WIZARDRY IN PRODUCTION OF SEEDLESS AND HYBRID FRUITS.

BY W. H. BACH.

IN A recent conversation with a friend the writer was surprised to hear him say, "This seedless fruit business is all a mistake." Why such a desirable feature of many of our finest flavored fruits should be so considered by anyone seems strange.

For many years experimenters have been busy with the problem of creating seedless fruit. Until recently their success has been only indifferent; but within the past decade quite a number of fruits have been rendered seedless, or have had their seeds made fewer and smaller. In the majority of wild fruits the seed occupies a large proportion of the fruit. Many wild fruits with a fine flavor are practically worthless, in fact, on account of the seeds.

Probably the best known and most widely used of any seedless fruit is the Navel orange. While its origin is shrouded in mystery, it is known that it was developed somewhere in Brazil, probably as a "sport branch," or what is known among fruit growers as a "mutation," and was introduced into this country about 1873 by William Saunders, then in the Agricultural Department at Washington. Mr. Saunders secured six trees through the aid of women missionaries at Bahia, Brazil. He failed to make the original trees grow but secured some new ones through budding and gave two of them to a Mrs. Tibbets whose husband had bought land near Riverside. These two trees are now standing in Riverside, one in the yard of the Mission Inn and the other at the foot of Magnolia avenue. They are the progenitors of the great seedless navel orange industry of California. It is a strange coincidence that at about the same time the Washington navel was introduced in this manner, another navel orange was developed in Australia, although this was not of so good a quality.

From bud variations there are now many types of the navel orange, although the buds came from the same original parents.

Lemons, limes and pomelos have been rendered practically seedless for a number of years, and recent types of lemons and limes that are absolutely seedless have been grown. The great Eureka lemon that has made the California lemon known everywhere is practically seedless.

Persimmons, in their natural state, have seeds; but there are several varieties now propagated that have lost not only their seeds, but nearly all of their astringency as well. Where the Virginia variety was inedible till after frost, we are now raising seedless persimmons that ripen in sunny California. Even the pomegranate has developed a variety that has a small hard spot surrounded with a soft jelly, where the seed is located in the commonly known species.

"Figs are made up principally of seeds," is a common comment; but the writer knows of four varieties of figs so nearly seedless that the seeds will not bother a person wearing false teeth, and two varieties that are absolutely seedless, a rich, creamy pulp taking the place formerly occupied by the seeds.

Grapes have lost their seeds in the cases of the Sultanas and the Thompson Seedless, while a blackberry with practically no seed or core and without thorns is within reach of any who wish to plant them. About twenty years ago (my informant is a son of the man who owned the tree) a peach tree that bore pitless peaches was developed, but the tree died without buds being propagated, therefore was lost to the world until another mutation produces the same result.

Many experiments have been made to secure a seedless and coreless apple. It is reported that a man in Oregon has secured this result, and the writer is interested in a tree that has produced seedless and coreless apples on part of its branches for several years. It remains to be seen if this feature can be propagated.

THE SO-CALLED WIZARDS.

It is frequently asked by those not versed in the fruit-growing problem "Why, if these things are produced occasionally, does not some one produce the desired results in other fruits?" Simply because they don't know how. The writer is always amused when he hears or reads a reference to a "plant wizard." "There ain't no sich animule." There is no more wizardry in the production of a new fruit or in changing the nature of an old one than there is in the production of animals. Nature never made a mule. Man learned that by breeding the female of the horse family to the male of the jackass family he produced a tough, hardy animal that was different from either.

Plants are hybridized by the same process. Every student of elementary botany knows that plants are possessed of sex elements similar in nature to those of animals. The great difference lies in the fact that while it is possible to control the parentage of animals, it is a difficult matter to do so in plants on account of the different elements that enter into the operation. To fertilize a plant the pollen, the male element, that is borne on the stamen of the flower, must reach the pistil, the female element of the flower, in order to cause the fruit to develop. If this is not done, the fruit either will not set or it will drop off when partly grown. This pollen is a fine flour-like substance and is carried in a variety of ways—the bee is the commonest carrier—but other insects help and the wind is a big factor. It is, therefore, difficult to fertilize with one particular element and for this reason seeds of fruit trees seldom come true to type. To illustrate—if you have a clingstone peach and a freestone next to each other they may cross pollenate so that a seed from the cling peach would produce a tree bearing freestone peaches, and vice versa.

To produce new fruits, therefore, is the result of countless experiments and not of any knowledge of wizardry possessed by any special person. Anyone who will exercise care and judgment can do it.

SEX IN PLANTS.

Let us take two quite well-known fruits as an example: The plumcot is neither a plum nor an apricot, but a combination of both. The tangle possesses both the nature of the pomelo or grapefruit and the tangerine. This fruit was produced by fertilizing the female blossom of the Marsh's seedless grapefruit with the male blossom of the Dancy tangerine.

To produce this result in any fruit, it is necessary to determine the nature of the blossom. Some fruits have bisexual blossoms; that is, blossoms in which the male and female elements are combined in the same blossom. Others have both male and female blossoms on the same tree, while others still have the male flowers on one tree and the female on another, thus making it necessary to have a tree of each sex in order to get fruit. The Smyrna fig is a notable example of the latter kind, the fruit of the male tree being borne for no other known purpose than to act as the home of the fig wasp that carries the pollen of the male to the female, thus fertilizing it and causing the figs to mature on the female tree, whereas otherwise they would all drop off.

When we have found the nature of our flower, as in the case of the grapefruit, we remove all the stamens from the flower, thus removing any opportunity for self-

SIMPLE MIXTURE MAKES HENS LAY

By W. S. Burgess.

Any poultry raiser can greatly increase his profits, easily and quickly by taking advantage of the 35 years' experience of a successful poultryman.

A life-long study of egg production has resulted in a secret formula of buttermilk and other valuable ingredients that puts pep into lazy hens. Users report increases of two to seven times as many eggs.

This secret formula is now put up in tablet form and is called Combs Buttermilk Compound Tablets. Simply feed in water or mix with feed.

I am so convinced that this wonderful formula is always successful that I say, kill the hen that won't lay after using it.

One million new users are wanted, so for a limited time any reader of this paper can get a big double size box (enough for a season) on free trial by simply writing for it. Send no money. Use the tablets 30 days; if at the end of that time your hens are not laying 2 or 3 times as many eggs; if you are not more than satisfied in every way the tablets are to cost you nothing. If completely satisfied this big double size box costs you only $1.00 on this introductory offer.

Not only do they make this exceptional offer, but the tablets give such universal satisfaction that a Big Bank GUARANTEES that they will live up to every word of their offer. With the box of tablets you will be sent a letter from the Broadway State Bank which reads in part as follows: "You, therefore, take no risk whatsoever in ordering a package of tablets from them, as this bank will refund out of this deposit the one dollar you send them provided the Milk Products Co. fails to do as agreed." Because you are fully protected and are the sole judge as to whether you want your money back, it is asked as an evidence of good faith on your part that you pay the mail man the dollar when he delivers the package.

Simply send name—post card will do—to Milk Products Co., 407 Creamery Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., and the big box of tablets will be mailed immediately, post paid.

SHIPPING OF BABY CHICKS IS NOW REDUCED TO A FINE ART.

BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

THE ease with which day-old chicks are handled and shipped, arriving in good condition at points of destination, has been an important factor in popularizing the business. Boxes called in the trade "flats" (much resembling the shallow boxes used by nurserymen in growing seedling plants) are used. These are about five inches deep, fifteen to eighteen inches wide and some two feet long, holding on an average about 150 chicks; with the larger breeds often running a lesser number, while with the smaller breeds a few more are crowded in. Some hatcheries take a strip of coarse muslin or burlap, lay one end across the box, then a layer of cotton batting, thin in mild weather, thicker in cold, then fold back the muslin, and press this padding even over the bottom and edges, when the "flat" or box is ready for the chicks. In filling avoid chilling the birds, then fold burlap or another layer of batting over the top, nail down strips, and the precious cargo is ready for the express. In this State burlap is generally used over the top; in any event care must be exercised to secure sufficient ventilation. This the burlap allows; where a closer and warmer material is used for long shipments it may be advisable to bore a few small holes in the box at the sides.

A Future Flock of Layers.

Day-old chicks stand shipment under proper conditions reasonably well, even though the journey may consume all of two days and nights. In the anatomy of the just-hatched and dry chicks is the entire egg from which it has just kicked itself, furnishing sufficient sustenance and staying power to keep the chirper going for a few days, the great consideration being warmth, which the little body furnishes, especially if chicks are huddled together in groups of fifty or more, and which the batting bottom and burlap top tend to conserve. The greatest risk is while in transit. If placed in the express car too near stoves and steam pipes so as to become overheated, or carelessly left in a cold draught, the birds may chill; in either case the result would be a loss of life. If, however, reasonable care is exercised in this respect, they will stand ship- small percentages of death.

No Poultry Show This Season.

It begins to look as though the present season would pass into history without a midwinter poultry show in Los Angeles—the first time in some thirty odd years, if the writer's recollections are not in error. In more respects than one, this is a matter of regret, as it indicates a waning interest in pure-blooded fowl, and a want of appreciation in the educational and practical values of exhibitions. For sure it is that a well-conducted poultry show stimulates an interest in fowls and for that reason possesses an advertising value to breeders and fanciers that nothing else can supply. We appreciate that poultry shows in this town have not always proved profitable, but that may be due to other causes than a want of public interest. Possibly no one cause has militated against the holding of successful shows so much as the want of an auditorium building in Los Angeles—some permanent place where functions of this nature may become a fixed fact in the public mind. Another feature has been a want of a unity of action among breeders and fanciers, resulting in two poultry shows in Los Angeles for the past two seasons, whereas one would have served the purpose and might have sustained a patronage both in entries and gate money to have rendered a financial success possible. It is our firm conviction that a poultry show economically managed on strictly business lines is a feasible proposition in Los Angeles, and ought to be as much of a fixture as the fall fair. It may not be possible to inaugurate a show this season, but we certainly hope for better things in another year from now.

Why Send Away for Birds?

We are not an advocate of sending away money for exhibition and breeding fowl under the impression that eastern-bred stock has the "edge" on that produced in California. In certain strains and in the hands of recognized breeders this may be true; and where specific objects are sought in the breeding pen it is all right to import good birds. In the main, however, the best birds of California are the equal of those bred elsewhere, and in many cases superior. Often long prices are paid for imported birds which are no better, and in cases not as good as those to be had at home and for less money. We know of one sale aggregating $200 for a trio guaranteed to win at a fall fair which "got by" with only fifth award—a mere ribbon. Another is where a $250 pen, guaranteed to win first prize in any competition, won only a fourth at the Washington State Fair. These disappointments are not due to the fact that recognized eastern breeders are destitute of good birds, but from the opinion that "any old thing" can get into the blue ribbon classes in California poultry exhibitions, when, quite to the contrary, it requires some quality to be awarded first place. In certain breeds, notably the Black Minorca, Rhode Island Reds, Blue Andalusians, White Leghorns, Rocks and a few others, the best California strains are hard to beat. Then why send East for stock? Why not encourage home industry?

Mass and Individual Treatment.

In the maintenance of a flock of domesticated fowl the one thing above others to observe is a robust health. Obviously this calls for a wholesome environment and wholesome feeding. But it is not to write of sanitation that prompted this paragraph; quite to the contrary, we were thinking of the treatment of individual ailing birds—an operation that always impresses us as not only unprofitable, but more or less irksome. What is really required (if sick fowl are to be doctored at all) is a remedy that can be applied in mass rather than individually. This may be accomplished by application in the mash foods or else in the drinking water. Naturally there are cases where only the individual treatment is possible. Among the preventive remedies is permanganate of potash, which is usually effective for the ordinary germs that lead to colds and other ordinary complaints. Get the crystals and make a saturated solution—which means put a few more crystals in the water than it will dissolve. In a saturated solution of permanganate of potash there are always crystals in the bottom of the vessel.

RESCUED GROVES.

a good crop maturing on the trees at this time.

Mr. Stowell is a firm convert to the idea of having live stock of some kind on the citrus ranch to supply fertilizer for the trees. In his case it is Rhode Island Red hens, which besides yielding valuable soil food, produce a good income in themselves for their owner. Mr. Stowell used to herd fence enclosures in which he keeps them, but his present plan is to keep them in one place, collecting the droppings and distributing them to the trees. Once in a while he lets the birds range in some rows of barley which he plants in the midst of his grove to attract them but generally they are kept in their own corner of the property.

Mr. Stowell has a modern pumping plant and underground irrigation system. He religiously puts in cover crops and gives his trees the attention needed to keep them in healthy condition. This, of course, makes him all the more disgusted with the gopher problem, which he has in spite of all his beneficial care and precautions. The rodent visitors from the neighboring vacant lands are no respecters of well-cared-for groves.

Mr. Stowell fights them with a variety of traps, with poison and wits assistance of a lively dog dog and four frisky cats. He slaughters many gophers, but a few replaced small trees here and there around the edge of his grove show where original trees have been ringed and killed, while asphalt-covered scars at the bases of trunks indicate where a rescue in time has saved a tree. Needless to say, Mr. Stowell is one of those who wants gopher control put on the same basis by the county as squirrel control.

Farm News of the Great Southwest.

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

SAN BERNARDINO.—Plans are under way by which the Farm Bureau of this county is to put on a county-wide membership campaign to begin about February 1. Those in charge expect to reach every bona-fide land owner in the county by means of letters, and a double number of the Farm Bulletin Monthly is being prepared to send out for the same end. Just before the campaign begins, a dinner will be held at which the workers will receive instructions. There is a great enthusiasm over the campaign notwithstanding the fact that the membership dues have been increased. The dues for the first member of a family who signs up is $5 per year and for each other adult member $2.50. All are being asked to sign for three years, paying one year's fees down and giving an order on the member's bank for the other two years' dues when due. This will save much expense and put the Farm Bureau in a position to carry out various projects of help to the farmers of the county, it is felt. The chairman of the membership committee is E. H. Richardson of Adelanto and Ontario and the work is being largely directed in person by President R. B. Peters and Farm Adviser D. S. Fox. Nonresident owners will be urged to join, since their property benefits by the farm bureau work. The organization of the citrus centers under the leadership of W. M. Mertz is causing the citrus farmers to take a deeper interest in the work than ever before. It is expected that a large number of recruits will come from the citrus districts.

POULTRYMEN OPTIMISTIC.

TULARE.—Optimism is the key note of the poultry industry in Tulare for 1921, according to I. N. Foss, manager of the Poultry Association, and other poultry leaders. Depression affecting other lines of agricultural industry has had no local influence on poultry lines. This thriving condition has led to large orders for the coming year, baby chicks for early spring delivery taking the lead, with every indication of a record trade. Mr. Foss states that information is that cold storage eggs in the East will be consumed this month, leaving a market without reserves and a guarantee of high prices for the next several months. Locally eggs are selling from 8 cents to 10 cents higher than at the same period last year. This, with the lower cost of feed and prospects of generous rainfall this winter, and good feed conditions in 1921, makes the poultry field one of the best, it is reported.

TO BUY PICTURE MACHINE.

VENTURA.—The Ventura Farm Bureau directors have voted to purchase a portable moving-picture outfit to be used at various center meetings. The United States Department of Agriculture has a large list of films for distribution as has the University of California, the Forestry Department and a number of film-distributing concerns. These visualize the how, when and why of many procedures which the agriculturist would like to learn about. The use of these films, it is also felt, will help in putting over some parts of the program of work which is being mapped out for the coming year particularly those parts difficult to describe by words, and also will be the medium through which entertaining hours may be spent.

SUCCESS DUE TO PRUNING.

ONTARIO.—That pruning is the "whole thing" in the successful production of peaches, was the declaration this week of Fred Petrie, well-known rancher and pruning expert of No. 824 South Palm avenue, in displaying some photographs of a two and a quarter-acre peach orchard owned by him at Francis street and Fern avenue, from which he took nineteen tons of fruit last [illegible] be done for an old orchard which has not had the proper treatment in the pruning line, the secret of success lying in giving the trees the proper start the first year of its growth. He trims his trees low, so that even when they are several years old all the fruit may be picked without the use of a step-ladder. Mr. Petrie so prunes that the branches of the tree form a lattice work, one branch supporting another. So great was the production of his small grove last year that 726 props were required to support the fruit-laden branches. There are but 220 trees, mostly Albertas, in the orchard, which Mr. Petrie planted himself eight years ago. He attributes the wonderful production record to the fact that the orchard has been properly pruned. Mr. Petrie's orchard is attracting the attention of pomologists and fruit men generally and he is being sought for advice by those who are contemplating setting out deciduous orchards.

SEEK PROTECTION.

PHOENIX (Ariz.)—Arizona's Democratic representatives in Congress are being urged to get behind the new tariff bills in every way that can serve to wall off the influx of foreign wool, long-staple, cotton and vegetable oils. Especial attention is being paid locally to the chasm into which cottonseed and cotton oils have fallen and Congressman Hayden has been asked to see if he cannot forward legislation looking toward prohibition of imports of oriental oils, including those from peanuts, soy beans and cocoanut.

NEW GRAPE ACREAGE.

PORTERVILLE.—F. R. Wiesendanger, foreman for Willey Giffen on the Callison tract west of Porterville, one of the most extensive holdings in the Poplar district, reports 720 acres prepared for grapes. Planting will start about February 1, with Thompsons and Muscats given the preference. A movement is on foot, fostered by the Porterville Chamber of Commerce and the Service Department of the Pioneer Bank, to extend telephone service to Poplar [illegible] phone service.

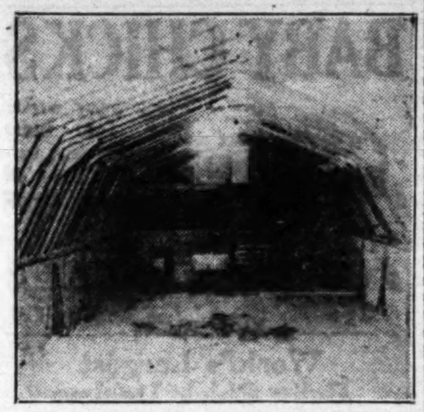
INGENIOUS SOLDIER BUILDS OWN PLANT.

SAN BERNARDINO.—That the war taught the boys who helped win it how to help themselves is evidenced by the story of one of San Bernardino's young men who went to France and came home again, happily able in body and mind to take up his work again where he had left off when his country called. This young man is John Henry Olsen of Base Line and Muscat avenue, who had already begun to take great interest in poultry before he went to the war and who is now getting fairly started on what promises to be a most successful business. The first thing Mr. Olsen did after marrying the girl he had left behind him was to buy out the White Leghorn poultry ranch of Jack Welch, a veteran poultryman now retiring, and go to work to make it just what his idea of a poultry ranch should be.



An Incubator "Cellar."
Built by J. H. Olsen, ingenius soldier-poultryman of San Bernardino.

"I didn't have the money to buy materials for such an incubator house as I felt I must have," said Mr. Olsen the other day, "so I had to do the best I could. The incubator cellar is sixty feet from back to front and fourteen feet high at the highest point of the ceiling. The returned soldier has evidently embodied some suggestions of both the cathedrals of France and the Y.M.C.A. dugouts in his cellar, for the ceiling is of semioctagonal arches covered over with corrugated iron and dirt, and at least five feet of the walls are under ground. The arches are made of the rejected ties which are being replaced by new ones on the Santa Fe railroad and which one can buy for a nominal price. The iron he rescued from the débris of a fire in a hardware store.

Looking into the cellar from the front, it has a good deal the appearance of a church with groined arches, and the high windows add to the effect. One of Mr. Olsen's hobbies is that all draughts of air should be far above the incubators. The walls are cemented inside, the floor is cement and the temperature, owing to the deep layer of dirt, is practically the same in all weathers. The dirt on the outside is the same dirt excavated to make the cellar. Mr. Olsen's present capacity is 4200 eggs at one time and he has already practically a capacity business.

Another ingenious item is his homemade weighing apparatus. He weighs all his eggs [illegible] test the mixture. The scales used by him are balanced with exactness and delicate nicety. Then he has made a regular elevator and unit for grinding his feed. A gas engine does the grinding and a horse runs the mixer. He has his own pet formula and says he saves much by doing his own grinding. He has an interesting chemical laboratory in which he works out formulas that serve him in a practical way in his business.

The flock on this young soldier's ranch numbers 1700 layers, but he is going to raise all his pullets (he expects to raise 5000 this summer for himself) from eggs from 4, 5 and 6-year-old hens mated to cockerels from trapnested hens of high egg records. He says that he believes hens as old as that, which have been good layers all the time, have shown conclusively that they have such constitutions as he wishes his pullets to inherit.

"Every time I had leave from the army," Mr. Olsen says, "I looked up any flocks there might be in the neighborhood but I didn't learn anything in France. They didn't have anything but a few backyard birds that ran loose and received no care to speak of. They were mongrel birds at that and the owners only gave them the most casual care."

NEW REFRIGERATING SYSTEM TO BE TRIED.

California farmers and fruit growers use more refrigerator cars than those of any other State, and are much interested in the proposed test by railroads centering in Los Angeles of the brine system of refrigerating products shipped in railroad cars, evolved by the A. B. C. Transit Refrigeration Company of Chicago, represented by Lewis Penwell, president, who is now in Los Angeles. This system is in use on Canadian railroads, and in trucks in many large cities. It has been thoroughly tried out and is said to have been found adapted to the shipment of oranges, cantaloupes, and other products.

At present, cars are cooled with ice, and a large part of this refrigeration is wasted en route. With the use of brine circulating through pipes in the top of the car, the brine being kept in motion through the rocking of the car, the ice bill is kept down and a more uniform and generally lower temperature is maintained, according to the A. B. C. representatives. The new system, it is claimed, saves half the ice, saves about 20 per cent of the loading space, because the brine tanks are on top of the car, and gives an even temperature all over the car. It also gives a clean job of refrigeration because it takes the humidity out of the car. Tests have been made of this system in the shipment of cantaloupes from Imperial Valley. Lettuce may be shipped without ice in the containers with the brine method, it is claimed, and milk can be shipped from the Imperial Valley to Los Angeles without danger of loss. This system is now used by some of the large creameries in Los Angeles, on trucks.

GRIT ESSENTIAL TO HEALTH OF FOWLS.

Grit is essential to the health of fowls and to economy in feeding. Grit takes the place of teeth in preparing the feed for further digestion and is required for the proper preparation of feed in the gizzard. When the feed is not properly taken care of in this organ, an undue strain is thrown on the fowl's system, often resulting in disease and also allowing much of the nutriment to pass through the bird's body without being absorbed. In every pen or yard a box of grit should be kept. Recent investigators have asserted that grit is a part of the necessary feed of a flock, giving the fowls strong bones and a bright plumage.

Ordinarily, the hen does not consume enough lime to form the shells of eggs, if she is laying abundantly, unless something besides the ordinary grain feeds is accessible to her. Oyster shells are very good for this purpose. A box of crushed shells may be placed before the fowls, allowing them to eat at will. Old mortar and fine gravel are also useful in supplying lime.

Charcoal readily absorbs gases, impurities, and acids, and thus acts as a corrective when the stomach is sour and digestion has been impaired.

DEMAND INSPECTION.

PORTERVILLE.—According to advice received from Charles F. Collins, Tulare county Horticultural Commissioner, there is great danger of receiving phylloxera-infested grapevine roots from any district in the State, unless the roots have been inspected and passed upon by the horticultural commissioner of the district from which the vines were sent. In view of these important facts, commissioners of all counties of the State have resolved to insist upon this procedure. The treatment referred to consists of immersion of the roots in water at a temperature of 125 degree Fahrenheit, for a period of five minutes.

PLAN THE GARDEN.

tables to raise in the winter months. They produce a large quantity of food for the area occupied, and are very hardy. They require from three to five weeks more time to mature than the average root vegetable, but the gardener will find that he is well rewarded for his pains when they come to the table. Carrots do as well when planted in January as in any other month, but, of course, sprout and mature a little more slowly than during the months when the soil contains more heat.

Plant the seed in drills fourteen to eighteen inches apart and place about ten to twelve seeds in each foot of drills. It pays to take pains to get the seed well spaced as this avoids waste and thinning later. Cover one-half to three-fourths-inch with soil, and firm slightly with the hoe or hand. Where the plants are not too thick the little thinning that needs to be done when this method is used may be delayed until some of the plants are ready for the table. Keep the soil hoed about the plants so that the tops will not get sunburned.

Another vegetable that is ideal for the home garden in winter is the table beet. [illegible] Detroit Dark Red is an excellent [illegible]. Prepare and irrigate the plot before planting. Then do not irrigate before the young shoots appear. The seed should be sown in drills, with about eight or ten seed balls to the foot, drills eighteen or twenty inches apart. Remember each seed ball contains from three to six seeds, and that the beets will require considerable thinning. The young beets pulled out in thinning can be either set out in a new bed or used for greens. It is a good plan to transplant the thinned beets, but the soil must be loose and moist.

FAVOR VELVET BEANS.

Some velvet beans are grown in California, and their culture is growing more popular. This bean is grown in most of the Southern States, and fed to cows, the protein content being high. There is great difficulty in cutting the beans because they grow so rank and intertwine, and dairy farmers pasture their stock in the bean fields.

Exports of fresh and frozen pork from the United States up to Sept. 30, 1920, increased 20.2 per cent over the first nine months of the preceding year.

BUREAU WILL HELP IN LABOR PROBLEM.

There is a rift in the cloud for the rancher and dairyman on the question of labor, according to an announcement made by E. H. Hancock, district superintendent of the Public Employment Bureau. The outlook is more promising than it has been at any period in the last six years, Mr. Hancock says:

A step that promises to be of real benefit to the ranchers and dairymen of Southern California has been taken by Mr. Hancock in installing in the Los Angeles office of the bureau a special department where the wants of the rancher, the fruitgrower, the stockman and the dairyman in search of help, both male and female, will be looked after by specialists in the selection of the right man or woman to fill the demand.

It is the intention of Mr. Hancock, working in close co-operation with the county farm advisers and all organizations of ranchers and dairymen in the county farm bureaus, to centralize all calls of the farm products producers into the Public Employment Bureau in its Los Angeles office and to make special provisions for handling quickly and surely all calls that come from ranches and dairies to facilitate their work.

The new section of the employment service is located in and is a part of the industrial division of the bureau at 212 Court street. Interviewing rooms have been specially fitted up for the convenience of the ranchers and dairymen, where they can discuss situations with prospective employees and make an estimate of the applicant, uninterrupted by the general rush of the division.

According to the arrangement, one clerk will be specially assigned to filling ranch and dairy orders and at all times will be working to their interest on the floor of the big labor assembly room.

A special plan of transporting help for the ranchers as well as other employees is in use by the bureau and its records, according to Mr. Hancock, show that shipments handled by it during the past year have proven very satisfactory to both the employer and those going to the work. During recent months the bureau has shipped to the cotton growers of Imperial Valley many carloads of cotton pickers.

It is not necessary for the far-removed rancher or dairyman to make a special trip to Los Angeles in order to secure help. Mr. Hancock explains. If he will clearly define his wants and conditions by mail or telephone he can receive the service without interruption from his work.

The public employment bureaus are operated by the State of California without any fee being charged to the employer or employee. There is one requirement, however, Mr. Hancock says, and that is that an applicant must satisfy the bureau that he or she is competent and willing to do a fair day's work for a fair day's pay. In addition to the Los Angeles office, the State operates bureaus in San Francisco, Oakland, Sacramento, Stockton, San Jose, Marysville, Chico and Fresno and has seasonal officies where the occasion demands.

During the fiscal year closing June 30 last, the Los Angeles office placed 100,734 men and women at work. This number, it is stated, established a record that is unequaled by that of any other like organization.

According to Superintendent Hancock, the rancher has been losing too much of his crop through inadequate labor supply at the time when he is at the peak of his preparation and harvest. It is to assist in overcoming this handicap and to help in putting these lost dollars into his pocket that the ranch and dairy section of the bureau was created.

"The rancher has suffered through not knowing where to turn to get the labor at the time when he needs it the worst," Mr. Hancock says, "and it is the purpose of the bureau to acquaint him with the fact that he can secure the needed help and that men and women skilled in the selection of the right man or woman for the right place are waiting to give him every possible assistance.

"Every year the bureau lists a large number of women who desire to work on ranches during the summer season. This especially applies to the fruit season and to cannery work. Many of them are experienced and spend every summer in the country, taking their entire family and remaining throughout the picking and canning season.

"An instance of the working of the bureau was shown in the harvest of the raisin crop in the San Joaquin Valley during the railway strike two years ago when no trains were running and every stage and bus was booked ahead for a week. More than 200 pickers were at work in Fresno and the surrounding territory in two days after the order was received."

There are 453,620 acres set to prunes in Jugo-Slavia, which are now returning their owners a good profit when shipped to America, practically duty free, to compete with the California product.

PLAN GARDEN NOW IF YOU'VE DECIDED TO "GROW YOUR OWN."

BY A. E. HENDERLEY.

HOW much ground are you going to devote to raising vegetables this year? How much time will you have to take care of a garden? These are important questions to decide, once you have made a New Year's resolution to cut down food costs by "growing your own" in the best State in the country for this activity.

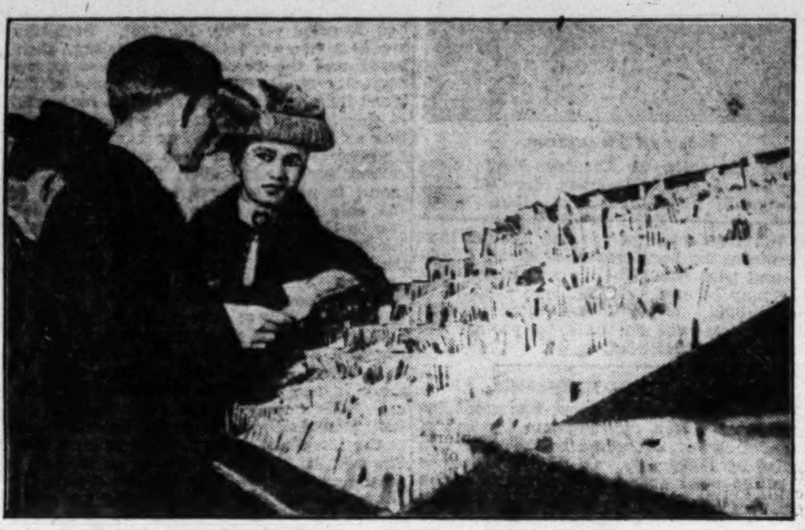
Before you make a survey of the back yard, calculate how much time you can devote to the garden per week. The days are getting longer and the hours for garden work will be more numerous as the weeks go. Two hours per day are enough to devote to a large back yard or farm garden, and a plot sufficient to furnish the small family with vegetables can be attended to with half the time, if it is used advantageously. The main thing is proper planning.

It is a mistake to have the garden too large. It does not pay to grow vegetables for the neighbors. Let them grow their own. Keep down water bills and let the vegetables you raise be top-notch in quality. If you attempt too large a garden it is liable to be neglected, once the enthusiasm is worn off.

In order to conserve time, labor and seed make a plan of your garden on paper, allowing for at least one path down the center, and giving the early sorts of vegetables the advantage of needed sunlight. Procure one of the 1921 seed catalogues and make your selection of seed carefully. A great many varieties of seed are offered, but not all are adapted to your conditions. Ask the seed man about them, explaining your type of soil and location. Be prepared to irrigate. Do not expect the rainfall to furnish all the moisture.

MAKE A COMPOST BED.

It is necessary at this time of the year to make a general clean-up of the garden plot, fence corners, etc., to guard against the wintering over of pests, and it is advisable to make a compost bed or heap, to be used in fertilizing the soil. Many pests are lurking beneath the piles of rubbish or find a host plant in the weeds bordering the garden. Cut these down, even if they are on your neighbor's yard, for they will benefit you in making compost and benefit your neighbor who also would like a clean lot.



There are Vegetable Seeds for Every Garden.

Gather these weeds, lawn clippings, leaves and all vegetable matter and mix with poultry droppings or barnyard manure if procurable. Mix up together and wet down occasionally. Before spading or plowing for your garden scatter the contents of the compost evenly over the soil and turn under thoroughly, incorporating it with the soil. The great need of light soils in this semiarid region is humus, vegetable and animal matter and every particle of vegetable trash that is placed in the soil will help the plants thrive.

In using commercial fertilizers, the gardener should be careful to distribute them evenly, so that every plant will get its proper share. It is a good plan to sieve the commercial fertilizers before spreading, so as to insure good distribution. Lumps are harmful and wasteful. All commercial fertilizers should be raked in as soon as practicable after applying.

REARRANGING HERB GARDEN.

In January, while there is generally considerable moisture in the soil, is a good time for the rearrangement of the herb garden. Those who have no herb garden are missing something. Such persons can start one at this time, for nearly all the varieties are hardy. No garden is really complete without a collection of sage, caroway, thyme, summer savory, parsley, peppermint and other herbs. The fresh herbs are much better for flavoring and garnishing than the dried herbs bought at the store.

Some of the herbs can be divided at this time and set in other locations. Do not let the peppermint get too much of a start in the garden. Keep it within bounds, or it will become more of a pest than otherwise, though this need not deter the gardener from planting it, as it spreads from stolons rather than from roots. Thyme can be increased by either seeds or cuttings. Winter marjoram can be divided at this time and increased. Fennel will not do well unless sown again. The herbs, as a rule, like a warm, sunny corner, and fairly light soil. Keep all the herbs growing in a square plot in a corner of the garden, where they will not interfere with the annual plants.

GROWING PEAS.

Either dwarf or telephone peas start well in January and they should be given the most careful treatment. Peas planted at this time of year should be set nearer the surface than in summer, say an inch deep in light soil and three-fourths of an inch deep in heavy soil, in order that the seed may be warmed and sprout readily. In March, April and May peas should be planted nearly twice as deep.

Let us follow the method for growing sweet peas in raising peas for the table. This is as follows: Dig a trench ten or twelve inches deep; fill three or four inches with barnyard manure, or compost, or well-decomposed chicken manure. Do not use fresh chicken manure as it burns the plants it comes into contact with. Fill up the trench with loose soil and irrigate, planting the seed in the moist soil as soon as it can be worked. If recent rains have fallen, it is not necessary to irrigate. The smooth varieties are best adapted for winter growing. Train the peas up on trellises so as to keep them out of the way of moisture and pests and to allow for hand cultivation.

Peas are very susceptible to climatic conditions and weather changes, but the peas which sprout in late January will not be greatly injured by frost in most locations in Southern California. Do not irrigate peas until they come up. And do not irrigate too frequently during the remainder of the winter, for peas do not like too damp a soil. They will stand a frost while they are blooming, but after the young pods appear, a heavy frost will injure the pods. When mildew appears spray with the best sulphur you can get, and spray in the morning. The tall Telephone pea is always popular in this region, and the Gradus is extra early.

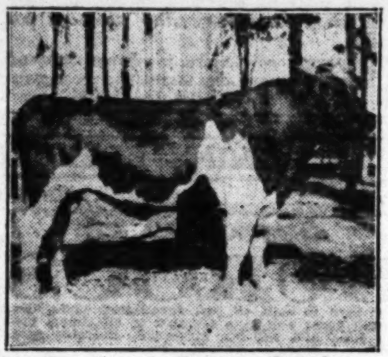
Guernsey herd. He purchased from Hollow Hill Farm a son of Imp. Brittleware Mistletoe with a record of 751 pounds of fat. This young bull was sired by Effie's King of Hollow Hill Farm, a son of Imp. Cherry 111 of the Effards, the grand champion Guernsey cow at Riverside in 1920. Mr. Bush also purchased Della Langdon of Hollow Hill Farm, first prize senior yearling at the California State Fair of 1920; also a five-year-old cow, Grace of Neshannock, and a junior yearling heifer, Violet Langdon of Hollow Hill Farm. Alfred Peterson of El Centro took a son of Effie's King of Hollow Hill Farm out of Capelle's Jessie, a 556-pound three-year-old. Hans Mortensen of Santa Rosa bought a son of King of Hollow Hill out of Princess Madora. H. J. Fay of Anaheim purchased a grade heifer, while B. M. Lederer of Chino bought a bull and six grade females. B. F. Bowen of Riverside purchased Lolita's Penrod, a bull sired by Pencoid's Secret Premier, and four grade females, including one cow at $500. B. H. Fish bought a Victor Penrod bull and four females, and Walter Young of Artesia purchased a bull sired by Effie's King of Hollow Hill Farm, and seven grade females.

Rosamaines Pontiac Ormsby, the 2-year-old pure-bred Holstein bull which sold in the Stalder sale to Julius A. Lorentzen, supervisor of advanced registry, representing the University of California, made quite a show record the past season. He won first in his class at Los Angeles, second at Riverside, and at Portland, in a very strong class, received fifth prize. Besides being a show bull he has six half sisters with records of 32.2 pounds of butter for seven days; and is a half brother to Gerben Abbekirk Maid, with a seven-day record of 34.46 pounds of butter and 642.8 pounds of milk, and a thirty-day record of 138.19 pounds of butter and 3037.4 pounds of milk. His sire, Sir Skylark Ormsby Hengerveld, has thirty-four A.R.O. daughters.



Rosamaines Pontiac Ormsby.

Dr. Charles Noggle, manager of the Lilac Ranch of Escondido, after attending the Portland Live Stock Show, went on up to Yakima, Wash., and selected twelve head of pure-bred Angus to place in the Lilac Ranch herd. While there he also selected some junior yearlings for A. W. Wohlford, president of the Escondido National Bank. Mr. Wohlford intends to build up a herd of Aberdeen-Angus cattle on his Yuma (Ariz.) ranch.

E. J. Sturgis reports that the Santa Anita Ranch herd of Holsteins has broken the State record in the senior 2-year-old class with a daughter of Prince Geische Walker. This heifer made 27.33 pounds of butter from 455.7 pounds of milk in seven days. May Altoana Pontiac, another cow in this herd, has recently finished a seven-day record with 32.95 pounds of butter.

NOTE: California Farmers have been slow to realize that the packers and butchers all over the country will pay more for Hampshire Hogs than for those of any other breed, and incidentally the Hampshires have won the blue ribbon of hogdom, namely the Championship in carload lots at the Chicago International Livestock Show in 1918, 1919 and 1920—and in the last two years the Reserve Championship as well. Such a record requires no comments.

In the Cornbelt States and through the South, hundreds of breeders identified for years with other well-known breeds are now breeding Hampshires only, because they find them the best money-makers.

TRYING FOR EXTRA EARLY CANTALOUPES.

BRAWLEY.—Competition among cantaloupe growers to get the earliest melons to market is more pronounced this year than ever. Hundreds of acres have already been planted, and the Japanese are setting paper caps on the tender leaflets that have peeped above the ground. Horticultural Commissioner Waite expects the cantaloupe acreage to go to nearly 20,000 acres, a greater area than was ever set to the fruit before. If this acreage of melons is planted, it is probable that there will be increasing difficulty in marketing the melons, owing to the continued high freight rates, and a lessened buying power throughout the country. This year the growers' association will market its own melons, but the larger number of growers will sell through distributors

Skillful Pump Designing Shows

in the efficiency curve

The AMERICAN-KERR Screw Pump Stands in a Class by Itself.

Think of a single stage pump delivering water to any elevation up to 700 feet with no shock or vibration. Think of a single stage double suction pump, direct connected to a steam turbine or electric motor, delivering water to such an elevation without any losses due to marine thrust bearings, reduction gears, or any of the disadvantages usually met with on multi-stage pumps, and you will naturally think of an AMERICAN.

Pumps for every service, from the largest irrigation project to the smallest industrial service pump, all have the same careful attention and consistently make good. Refinements of fifty years in pump design and manufacture are built into every pump that leaves the factory. Efficiency and performance are guaranteed in each installation.

"AMERICAN" engineers will gladly assist you with your pumping problems whether your needs be centrifugal, deep well plunger, or deep well turbine of standard type or special design.

Let the SUN give you plenty of HOT WATER

DAY & NIGHT

Indispensable if you have no gas supply. Saves three-fourths your heating costs if you're now using gas.

SEEMS impossible, doesn't it? But a DAY & NIGHT Solar Heater will actually deliver an abundance of piping hot water in your home every hour of the twenty-four, because it concentrates and stores the heat of the sun's rays. Thousands of successful installations in Southern California provide actual proof.

Think of the saving in gas this system insures you—fully three-fourths of your expense of heating water. Think what a necessity the DAY & NIGHT is if you have no gas supply. Adapted to country or city homes—mansion, bungalow, apartment-house or hotel. Can be installed in new buildings or old; no expense after first cost. Write for circular giving detailed explanation of the DAY & NIGHT, and picturing many homes where it is giving satisfactory service. Address Dept. G.

fertilization. The pollen from the tangerine can then be gathered at the proper time of its development, the protecting covering removed from the female flower (which should be covered in such a manner as to prevent any pollen except that from the desired flower reaching it) and the pollen dusted over the female flower, thus fertilizing it. This can be done with a camel-hair brush, or a number of flowers can be used and placed in a fine linen cloth and dusted over it. Allow the fruit to mature and then plant the seed.

It will thus be seen that to produce a new fruit or a hybrid fruit by intention is a process requiring time and care, but there is nothing mysterious about it. Not many people will take the time and exercise the patience required to do these things and, therefore, most of our new fruits are the result of chance mutations or sport branches on trees, or of chance seedlings growing up that have been thus cross-pollenated.

NATURE FOOLS 'EM.

On one occasion a neighbor had a number of Wickson plums in one row and a row of Satsumas on one side of them. At the time these blossoms were mature and ready for fertilizing, the wind blew continuously for nearly a week in a direction where it carried the pollen from the Satsumas to the Wicksons. I never ate such plums, and, knowing the cause, bought a lot of them and planted the seeds, hoping to secure a magnificent new plum. Here again Nature fooled me, for on account of some unexplained reason, not one of those seeds grew. They were planted with care; other seeds made growth near them. Is it possible that there is some strange law of philoprogenitiveness that acted in this case? It is claimed that a one-sixteenth blood Negro was never known; that the blood will not blend further than the eighth. Does something of this kind hold good in the fruit world and did it manifest itself here? There were over 100 seeds planted.

Mutations or sport branches are responsible for most of our new varieties of fruits. It is no uncommon thing to find differences in the fruits grown on the same tree. The writer has a lemon tree in his yard that bears seedless fruit on one side and fruit with seeds on the other, while the nature of the fruit is also different. This tree was frozen down in the cold winter of 1912-13, came up from the roots, one stem, and was never budded. The nectarine came as a sport branch on a peach tree, and Prof. Wickson is authority for the statement that nectarine seeds will sometimes produce peach trees, or trees bearing peaches instead of nectarines.

Of the hybrid fruits more recently produced, doubtless the tangelo is the finest. It partakes of both the nature of the grapefruit and the tangerine. It is about the size of an orange, has a loose skin like a tangerine, but does not peel, nor do the sections separate as freely as in the tangerine. It has a flavor that is a modified grapefruit and for those who do not desire the distinctive flavor of the grapefruit it seems destined to become a favorite.

Another tree that has given its first fruit recently is a dwarf of the lime family. It, too, partakes of the nature of the tangerine in that the skin is loose, the sections separate readily and it is seedless. The fruit is very small, probably an inch and a quarter in diameter, but has a distinct lime flavor. Specimens of the fruit are now in the hands of the State Agricultural College for analysis and investigation.

So, if you are interested in new fruits, do not jump at the conclusion that only "plant wizards" can produce them. You are as likely to blunder on a valuable fruit as the next person. The only reason why one person can produce them more than another is that one may have greater opportunities. One of the nicest peaches the writer knows of was produced in Los Angeles by the chance planting of one peach seed. The eastern Concord grape was produced in the back yard of an humble home in New England and is now probably the most widely grown grape in America.

DAIRY CANNOT BE RUN BY GUESSWORK.

No true dairyman would withhold feed from a cow if he knew by feeding it the milk flow would be increased to double the usual, and no true dairyman would give feed to a cow which he knew was eating the profits made by his other cows. Milk is produced from the feed and water a cow consumes. If the feed is inadequate, the milk flow will be likewise.

"Know your cows," is a trite saying for the dairyman. It is fallacy to feed a cow which produces fifty pounds of 4 per cent milk the same amount of grain as a cow which produces twenty pounds of 3 per cent milk. And the boarder cow makes the greatest inroads on the profits of dairying. The only sure means of knowing a boarder cow is by weighing and testing her milk. The dairyman who guesses at the production of his cows is no nearer the facts than the man who guesses on any other proposition.

CLEAN UP PIG PENS AND AVOID CHOLERA.

A few days' work in the pig pens and yards scraping, disinfecting and cleaning is pretty good hog-cholera insurance. Strict sanitation is the best aid the farmer can give to the work of the hog-cholera serum. It is unwise and uneconomical to depend entirely upon the serum to protect the swine from this costly disease.

In 1918 the farmers of America paid a serum bill of over $5,000,000 and they still lost $60,000,000 worth of pigs. There can be no doubt as to the effectiveness of the serum treatment, but the sensible farmer will do what he can with shovel, hoe and disinfectant to remove the cause of the trouble.

The threat of cholera is always present so long as there are undrained cesspools and wallows. Straw stacks should never be left from one year to the next if they are where the hogs can reach them. Shelters and pens should be so constructed that they may be easily cleaned and exposed to the sunlight. A few days devoted to work of this sort will do much to protect the herds of another year.

EGYPTIAN COTTONSEED.

Cottonseed is the most important by-product of cotton entering into the export trade of Egypt, according to the American Consul at Alexandria. Of 9,767,786 bushels of cotton seed exported during the cotton year from Sept. 1, 1919, to Aug. 31, 1920, all went to the United Kingdom with the exception of 12,824 bushels consigned to the continent of Europe. The carry over on hand at the beginning of the 1919-20 season was greatly increased by a good crop and diminished exports during the subsequent season so that the present 1920-21 season will start with the unusually large quantity of 1,524,761 bushels on hand.

The big Diamond Bar Ranch sale of Duroc-Jersey hogs will take place on the ranch at Spadra, twenty-eight miles east of Los Angeles on Feb. 16, 1921. Both the breeders who are intending to enlarge their herds and the beginners will have an opportunity on that date to buy some of the blood lines which have proven so successful in this herd. In making the selections for this sale the Diamond Bar has picked out a group of individual sows and gilts of excellent type and quality, that would be a credit in any pure-bred herd. Included in the sale will be three by old Pathfinder, two by Orion Sensation, a litter mate to the World's Grand Champion, Great Orion Sensation; eight by Mammoth Sensation, Jr.; four by Great Pathfinder, the Putman boar of Tecumseh, Nebraska, one of these gilts being out of Model Maud, the $6000 first-prize senior yearling sow of the 1919 National Swine Show. Others are by High Pathfinder, Great Model and Creator and there is one show gilt by Ace of Pathfinders. This one is Cherry Duchess, 2nd, the first prize and reserve junior champion gilt at the Los Angeles Livestock Show last fall. She will be bred to Diamond Sensation, a good son of Great Orion Sensation, that the Diamond Bar Ranch is growing out as a herd boar prospect. Being out of a Pathfinder dam, the Diamond Bar people believe, he makes an exceptionally well-bred boar to cross on gilts sired by Ace of Pathfinders and Mammoth Sensation Jr.

Holstein breeders of Southern California are anticipating some lively bidding on Thursday, February 3, when the James J. [illegible] with high records been offered at public auction in this section. It is seldom indeed that the buyer has an opportunity to make a selection from such an outstanding group of individuals as this sale will offer. Naturally great interest will center around King Segis Pontiac Jaunek, the proven herd sire in this popular herd. If this great bull goes outside of this section of the country, it will be a serious loss to Southern California. It is to be hoped that some of our local breeders will form a stock company and go to this sale determined to keep Jannek in the south, where he rightly belongs. Herd sires of this caliber are few and if he were to be used on some of the choicest individuals in our excellent Southland herds, there would undoubtedly be a great forward movement in Holstein circles and an increased number of high record heifers and show yard animals. Another individual in this herd which will attract the most particular buyer will be K. S. P. J. Pet Segis, the grand champion at Los Angeles in 1920, and a State record performer. The buyer of this wonderful heifer will get one of the most remarkable young cows ever produced in the south. Besides such attractions as these, Mr. Jeffries will sell his entire herd of registered Holsteins, comprising some sixty-five head of very choice individuals, many of them being sons and daughters of Jannek.

As evidence of a growing demand for good Guernsey cattle throughout Southern California, the Hollow Hill Farms of Colton reports to us that they have made an exceptionally good lot of sales in the past month. This popular breeding establishment has sold three pure-bred females for an average of $1063.33 each; seven pure-bred bulls at an average of $321.42 each; thirteen grade heifers and calves for an average of $183.84, all in the month of December. One of the grade cows brought $500, she being the daughter of King of Hollow Hill. W. E. Bush of Covina is starting a

WEATHER AND CROP SUMMARY GIVEN.

December was unusually wet in the northern portion of California. About the average amount of rain fell in the central counties, and the rainfall was deficient in the southern portion of the State. The snowfall in the Sierra Nevada Mountains was heavy, and it has become well packed, thus insuring a good supply of water for late irrigation purposes. So says Edward A. Beals, of the United States Department of Agriculture Weather Bureau. He adds:

Farm work is generally backward, due in the north to too much rain which made the soil so soft it could not be worked to advantage, while in the south the lack of rain caused it to become hard for plowing. Growth was slow in consequence of insufficient sunshine in the north and the prevalence of cool nights in the south. There were no damaging frosts.

Much wheat, oat and barley land had not yet been seeded early in January, but this work is progressing as rapidly as practicable. Early seeded wheat and barley came up nicely and in most places is in a thrifty condition. Some few fields in the Sacramento Valley have received too much rain and have turned yellow or else are spotted; being both good and bad within limited areas.

Green feed except in a few southern counties, is abundant and stock are doing nicely. The copious rains in the north were of especial benefit to unirrigated fruit trees, which previously were in a weakened condition because of protracted dry weather.

A large amount of rice remains unharvested in the north and there is a difference of opinion as to the amount that can be saved; some think it will be a total loss, while others are of the opinion that most of it will be saved should there be a period of dry weather within the next month or two. The picking of cotton proceeded slowly throughout the month.

A good crop of lettuce is being marketed in the southern counties and cantaloupe seeding has begun in the Imperial Valley. Navel oranges are somewhat backward in maturing in accordance with the 8 to 1 test and the fruit, while of good quality, is not sizing up as well as it did last year. Valencia oranges are in a promising condition as to quality, but the crop is not as large as usual. A large crop of lemons is ready to be picked and the trees are blooming well for summer fruit. Growers are holding back the picking of oranges and lemons because of unsatisfactory market conditions.

VALUE OF CROPS IN ARIZONA SHOWS LOSS.

PHOENIX.—Due to the sharp decline in the price of cotton and other farm crops, the value of agricultural crops produced in Arizona during 1920 shows a decline from the figure of 1919, according to L. M. Harrison, Federal statistician. The total value of all crops was approximately $40,000,000, compared with about $60,000,000 in 1919. These figures do not include the value of live stock, which is large because of the great numbers of beef cattle produced on the ranges.

Though the production of cotton was greater than in 1919, the total value was about $3,000,000 less. Last season the crop was grown on 107,000 acres and produced 29,000,000 pounds valued at $20,307,000. This season's crop was grown on 220,000 acres and produced 52,601,000 pounds, but the value shrank to $17,475,350.

FIRST DEMONSTRATION.

SANTA BARBARA.—Fruit growers of Santa Barbara county gathered recently at the apricot orchard of W. F. Norlin in Carpinteria Valley to witness a pruning demonstration given by C. C. Staunton, Farm Adviser of Ventura county. This is the first pruning demonstration held in Santa Barbara county. In addition to the demonstration, Horticultural Commissioner Eugene Kellogg of Santa Barbara county explained to the large number of growers present the various insect and fungus pests, and the methods of combating them. As a result of this talk the fruit growers of Carpinteria Valley are to buy a spraying outfit and carry on spraying work on a co-operative basis.

PICKING MACHINES, RUN BY SMALL TRACTORS, MAY CUT COTTON COSTS.

BY MARVIN H. LOOMIS.

AT THE ranch of Adam Shores, near Alamorio, Imperial county, recently, a large gathering of cotton farmers witnessed a try-out of a cotton-picking machine that has been successfully used in the cotton fields of the South Atlantic States. This mechanical cotton picker, drawn by a small garden type tractor, is reported to have picked 480 pounds of seed cotton in nine hours, or about five times the amount that one man would pick. Two men operated the machine. The cotton picked was cleaner than that picked by hand in the same field, and cotton buyers who attended the demonstration are said to have agreed it was three grades better than the hand-picked fibre.

The advent of the cotton-picking machine in the Imperial Valley and its apparently successful work has set the farmers to pondering. They realize that cotton is the only important agricultural product that is not harvested by machinery, and believe that the production of cotton will never be steadily profitable until some means is found to cheapen the cost of production. A cotton-picking machine that will successfully harvest the fiber will go a long way toward solving the cost problem.

This is not the first time a cotton-picking machine has been tried out in the great irrigated valley. At Seeley, in 1917, a cotton-picking machine was invented and successfully operated by James Schooley. It was operated on the suction principle, and was abandoned for the time being because of the cost of operation, as a costly motor was required to run the machine. This was before the general usage of garden type and other small tractors, which furnish power for the operation of just such machines at a small cost. The cotton men of the Southwest, until this year, had great difficulty in securing labor, and the quality of labor secured from Mexico and from the Southern States was far from being satisfactory. The cotton-picking machine, driven by the small tractor, it is hoped, will solve this perplexing problem for the farmer when industry again absorbs the surplus of labor.

A Mechanical Cotton Picker.

The machine is operated by a small garden type tractor.

PICKING MACHINE NEEDED.

For twenty years men have racked their brains to perfect a cotton-harvesting machine that would save the planters money. The price of cotton was originally based upon slave labor, in the Southern States, and this is one of the chief reasons why the planter has received an adequate return for his labor and investment only one year in ten, on an average. The pickers absorbed all the profits. The planter planted for his negro and white help, not himself, except for the years of America's participation in the late war. During the past two years three types of cotton-picking machines have appeared, and all three have seemed to be fairly successful both in reducing the cost of picking and in picking cleaner cotton. These types were of radically different principle. One, as the machine conceived at Seeley, was of the suction type. Another, the most widely used, was of the brush type. The third used steel fingers in imitation of the manual picker, but this, it is said, required some trouble to deposit the cotton in the bag.

The suction machine seemed to operate automatically. This machine was attached to a tractor of medium size, and four lines of suction hose ran from the cotton reservoir back of the machine into the hands of four men, each of whom took a cotton row. At the end of each of these hose arms was a valve which was normally closed. The operator presented this valve opening to a cotton boll, opened the valve, and the suction drew the seed cotton into the hose and finally into the reservoir. The tractor ran the blower mechanism. This machine is installed on a number of cotton plantations in South Carolina and Georgia, and a few are to be seen in Texas.

The machine running on the brush principle is most ingenious, and seems to pick cleaner cotton and leave a cleaner field than the other two. It is said that the young man who invented it was struck with the ease with which hungry cows stripped rows of cotton bushes when they broke from their pasture. The inventor noticed that a cow would lick the seed cotton clean from the burrs, her rough tongue catching the fiber. He, therefore, arranged a series of brushes in a cylinder which led to a cotton reservoir, and his picker was complete. It did not come into any extensive use, however, until the advent of the small tractor, which furnished the power for propulsion and suction at small cost. This brush principle consists of three revolving cylinders on which brushes are mounted, in much the same manner as in a carpet sweeper. The picking arms, presented to the bolls, quickly and cleanly remove the seed cotton. The capacity of this machine on the average throughout the season is said to be about 480 pounds per day.

HAND PICKING DIFFICULT.

It takes a good, experienced hand picker to average 100 pounds of seed cotton per day. The average daily capacity of hand labor in the South is seventy pounds per day. The mechanical picker can be established on any tractor. When the larger tractors are used, from four to six picking arms are in use, and the work of picking a field of cotton is greatly facilitated. But cotton is usually grown in smaller tracts than is wheat, corn or barley, and the picking machine attached to the garden-type tractor seems to be the most economical, before will understand the difficulty of before will understand the difficulty of hand picking once he tries it. He will find that he cannot grasp the cotton boll with the open hand, but must insert the fingers inside of the burr, and thus abstract the cotton. He will find that, in doing this, the rough portion of the boll will make his fingers sore, and he will probably have to lay off a few days after his first day's work in order to give his sore hands a chance to heal. New pickers must be broken in to the work each year in California and Arizona, and this means a great loss of time and much dissatisfaction of the worker who finds his first day's work at picking cotton hardly pays for his keep.

The writer believes that, after the present unusual price situation has passed, the area of Pima cotton in the Southwest will become larger and larger each year and will lead the cotton growers of America to the adaptation of machinery to cotton harvesting. Machine farming of all kinds has made its greatest progress in this part of the country.

WILL "SHOVEL" SNOW.

The farm tractor has been put to a variety of uses and is constantly proving its versatility. The newest use for these machines appears to be cleaning snow from city streets, as the city of New York has just bought a fleet of Holt Caterpillars for this purpose. The big machines, equipped with snow plows, will be put to work this winter removing the mountainous drifts of snow that accumulate in Gotham's canyon-like streets following storms.

The size and quality of your next fruit crop is being determined now by the condition of your soil.

Vital elements necessary to the success of the crop lie dormant—potash—nitrogen—phosphorus. Other equally important elements—sulphur and calcium—have been exhausted.

AGRI Gypsum will release these latent possibilities of your land and give it new life and fertility, when used as a root fertilizer and as a stimulant for luxurious cover crops.

AGRI Gypsum is a specially selected, specially ground and specially prepared Gypsum rock. A poor agricultural gypsum is not of much benefit; AGRI Gypsum is a remarkable fertilizer.

Segis Pietertje Prospect, a seven-year-old Holstein cow owned by Carnation Stock Farms of Seattle, Wash., completed a new world's record on December 18, 1920, with 37,380.1 pounds of milk and 1445.9 pounds of butter in 365 days. This remarkable record exceeds Tillie's Alcartra's former world's record by approximately 4000 pounds of milk and 122 pounds of butter. Prospect, the new title holder, made an average record of 102.42 pounds of milk and almost four pounds of butter daily. Her high day's milk record was 126.3 pounds and her high day's record for butter was 5.041 pounds. She gave 869.4 pounds milk in seven days and 3716 pounds in thirty days, while in butter she made 33.232 pounds in seven days and 140.9 pounds in thirty days. Mr. Alfred M. Ghormley, superintendent of Carnation Stock Farms, in describing this cow says: "Segis Pietertje Prospect is a very high-class show cow, as straight as a line, carrying out very good over her rump. She is the longest cow in our herd and one of the longest we have ever seen. Her head is feminine with a bright eye, good length, a large muzzle and powerful jaws. Her neck is long, slender and clean, her withers smooth and strong with wonderful length on her shoulder blade. Her heart is very full and shows remarkable capacity. Her middle is enormous both in length and circumference. Ribs are well spread, hips are very prominent and widely set apart, with great length to the pin bones. Her udder is of You've formed your ideal of a tractor that will exactly meet your requirements—you who haven't needed as big or powerful a tractor as "Caterpillar" 45 or 75. You've wanted a smaller tractor, but not the ordinary small tractor. You've wanted liberal power, absolute dependability, low operating and upkeep costs—above all, you've wanted a long-lived tractor. You've wanted, in short, a small tractor of the quality of design and workmanship that can be found only in Holt products, and you'll find your ideal in the "Caterpillar" 5-ton Tractor.

Perhaps you realized this when you heard of 5-Ton's achievements in war and peace-time work on two continents. Perhaps you determined then to wait until this tractor was available for delivery in this territory.

But if you haven't investigated the 5-Ton, if you aren't already familiar with its detailed points of superiority, investigate it without delay. For a time, at least, only a limited number of "Caterpillar" 5-Ton Tractors will be available for delivery here. You must act promptly to secure immediate or early delivery. Dairy Profits Depend On—What?

GOOD feeding and good breeding, partly, of course. These are routine considerations every dairyman knows. But, after all, the health consideration is the real fundamental.

As a milk-making machine, the dairy cow's production must depend on her bodily health—entirely. Actual or approaching disease can soon wipe out a cow's profit balance.

Because the hard-worked organs of production and reproduction are a natural prey of disease, the medicinal properties of Kow-Kare have been designed especially to tone up and strengthen these organs. Such cow ailments as Barrenness, Abortion, Retained Afterbirth, Scouring, Lost Appetite, Bunches can be prevented or successfully treated by cow owners with the aid of this wonderful medicine.

A trial will cost little; results will be conclusive. Sold by feed dealers, general stores and druggists, 70c and $1.40 packages. Write for free book "The Home Cow Doctor."

Rescue Groves from Floods—Now to Beat the Gopher!

A. W. Stowell of Baldwin Park in the Valencia grove which he has developed at the edge of the San Gabriel wash. The trees are six years old.

Looking from the Stowell grove across the wash itself. The county flood control work is making thousands of acres of such lands available for cultivation.

TO RECLAIM a bit of wash land, to see it safely bulwarked against floods, to get it nicely planted out to citrus fruits and then to have an army of hungry gophers pounce in upon the place from all the undeveloped acreage of the fellows who are "just letting their land lie"—well, it would make a man swear. But out by Baldwin Park, where they have had this experience they are doing more than swearing, albeit sorely provoked. They are going after the gophers—and they propose to get rid of them.

The orchardists who have established themselves along the edge of the San Gabriel wash near Baldwin Park have, many of them, overcome too many obstacles already to be discouraged by a mere rodent, destructive as this particular kind of a rodent can be. They have battled floods and they have pushed them back where they aren't doing any harm. They are getting rid of the gophers by every conceivable means of extermination they know and they are going to win this fight, too. No one can blame them, however, for being hostile toward the absent owners whose lands, ripe for productive development, are producing nothing but an annual crop of gophers to attack the trees in the groves.

It is a rich soil which has been washed down from the mountainsides into this district, and many a grower of years gone by was tempted, to his eventual undoing, to start a little farm on the edge of the San Gabriel's wide-spreading and ever-shifting bed. Grain growers for a generation or more took their chances and won or lost as the river decided to run its course meekly to the sea or dash around in a mad endeavor to submerge everything in reach. Then the citrus growers tried it and they too, had their fill of floods. Many an acre of promising young trees was cut away by the mischievous San Gabriel in the years when its mood was on.

The growers individually put in much time and labor and spent much money [illegible]rap along the channels of the river and its ramificaaions and gradually made their properties safer. The danger of tearing, unmanageable floods always existed, however, and the feeling of security did not become real until Los Angeles county began the carrying out of its great flood control program and started putting in flood barriers which it is devoutly hoped will, when completed, be permanent. Now these lands that once were always more or less menaced by quick-starting freshets in the mountains form an established citrus section of genuine promise.

Between the groves and the wash proper and lying in great areas in the district are many hundreds of acres in the aggregate which will one day doubtless be put to useful purposes, even as similar lands in other sections have been. That day cannot come any too quickly to suit the grove owners, for it is from these lands, as well as from certain poorly cared-for "improved" properties, such as may be found in almost all sections, that the rodent pests throng. Were it a case of ground squirrels and not gophers, the county could move in on the vacant or neglected lands and clear them out, assessing the costs against the owners. There is no definite provision thus far for moving against gopher-infested holdings in the same way. The people of the district are hopeful, however, that a way will be found to compel absentee owners to clean up their lands, and in the meantime they are making it hot for the rodents in every way they can.

Typical of the successful groves established on the edge of the wash area is that of A. W. Stowell, comprising ten acres of Valencias and put out in June, 1914. Floods no longer cause Mr. Stowell to lose any sleep, in fact, he never has suffered any serious damage therefrom, but he admits that the gophers keep him on the jump. The grove started bearing last year and has

The flood menace of former days practically eliminated, Mr. Stowell and his neighbors are compelled now to spend much of their time fighting gophers, which come into their groves from neglected land around the wash and raise havoc with the trees. Here is a young tree, itself a replacement for a "gophered" tree, which has been "ringed" just below the ground. The district is conducting a vigorous warfare against the destructive pests.

Gophers have ringed this tree above ground, killing it while it was loaded with fruit.

Mr. Stowell is assisted in his gopher campaign by a dog and four cats, which find the pests a delicacy worth hunting for. In addition to what they capture themselves, they get the catch of Mr. Stowell's traps.

Ninth Annual Show of the Los Angeles Pigeon Club.

I[illegible] by [illegible] fanciers who saw the entries at the ninth annual show of the Los Angeles Pigeon Club, held at 1022 South Broadway, Los Angeles, from December 29 to January 3, inclusive, that it was one of the best exhibitions of pigeons, both fancy and utility, ever held in the State. Birds came from all over Southern California and from Utah, Missouri and States farther East. Local fanciers were given warm competition, but won the lion's share of ribbons. Many specials, cups and cash prizes were offered. The showing made by the Junior Breeders' Association in connection with the ninth annual show was notable, special prizes being offered by the club members for this department.

A feature of the show was the large number of utility birds on exhibition. Breeders of pigeons for the market were much in evidence, and some birds that weighed three pounds, approximating the weight of some of the Mediterranean breeds of poultry, were shown.

The officers of the Los Angeles Pigeon Club are as follows: President, E. M. Hollander; secretary, R. M. Hoover; superintendent of show, T. S. Brown. Judges were J. A. Smith and R. W. Wales.

J. G. Clark of Inglewood carried off the honors in the Red Carneaux division with a fine bird valued by him at $200. A. M. Fowkes of Pomona, J. F. Rasmusson of Salt Lake City, King Lofts of Hayward, Burlington Lofts of Santa Ana and C. I. Wolfley of Los Angeles were also prize winners in this class.

J. A. Smith of Los Angeles was high winner in the oriental class, with a fine string of birds.

E. M. Hollander of Pasadena was the winner of the largest number of prizes in Baldhead Tumbler, although R. M. Hoover of Pomona and Messrs. Curry of Hayward and Farwell of Arcadia were all in the ribbons.

A grand string of Nuns was entered by T. S. Brown of Glendale, and captured all the honors.

Mrs. G. L. Ewin, holding cup offered for best old Muffed Tumbler, and trophy-winning bird owned by R. M. Hoover.

A $25 cup was won by Frank Tami of Los Angeles for the best old Muffed Tumbler, while Mr. Hoover was the winner of the $50 cup offered by the Tumbler Club of this State for the best young Tumbler bred this year. Mr. Hoover also won the $10 cash special for the best White Mottle bred this year.

C. Rothfuss of Glendale was the winner of the largest number of specials in Giant Runts, with Messrs. Browning of Alhambra, Curry of Hayward and Johnson and Perham of Los Angeles all getting their share of the ribbons.

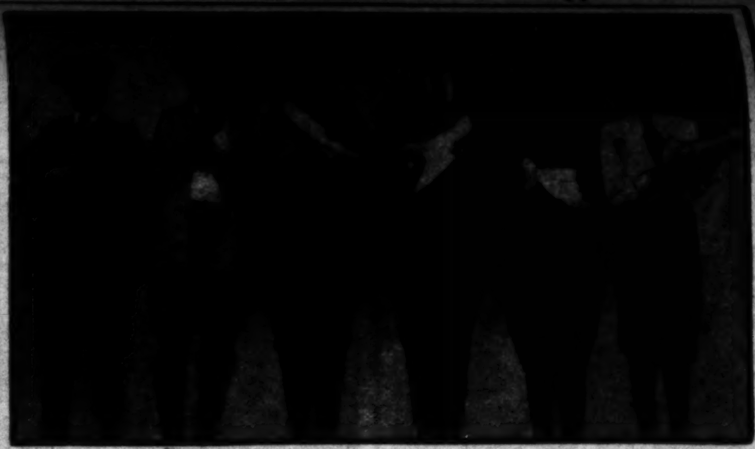
In Pigmy Pouters, a fine exhibit was made by Ewen & Lindberg of Los Angeles, Mr. Foster of Fillmore and Crook Brothers of Oakland. Honors were about evenly divided among the three.

In White and Red Muff Tumblers, Black, Blue, Red and Yellow Saddles, Messrs. Burton, Hoover, Blumenberg and Warner carried off the honors.

A fine display of the real English Carriers was made by O. B. Lindberg of Los Angeles.

Show and exhibition Homers were shown by Mr. Brown of Glendale and Mr. King of Hayward, and many fine birds were to be seen in this display.

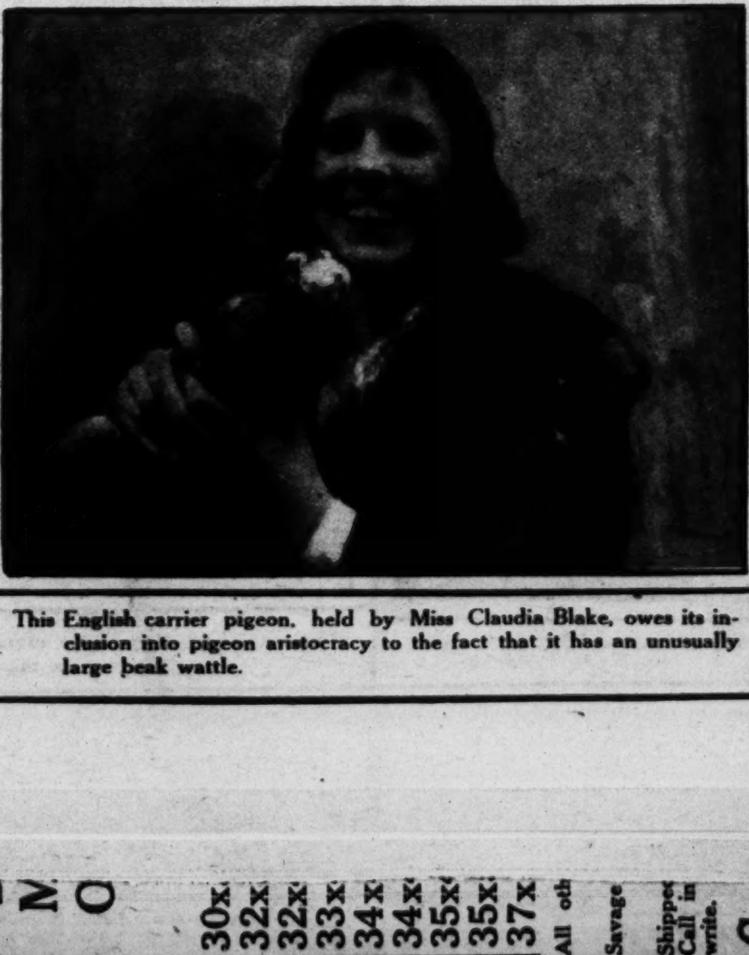
Dr. Warner of Los Angeles was the winner of the $50 cup given by the members of the Tumbler Club of this State for the best young Tumbler bred this year.



The young idea in pigeon breeding was well represented at the show. Left to right: Emmett Oldenhage, Jack Brown, Ed Kluckhohn, Andrew Stodel, Porter Chase and Asa Hewitt, juvenile exhibitors.

A corner of the pigeon exhibit, said to include the largest showing of fancy pigeons ever made in the Southwest.

There were pigeons on exhibition that weighed as much as some chickens; a three-pound Giant Runt, first in class, owned by C. Rothfuss, Glendale.



This English carrier pigeon, held by Miss Claudia Blake, owes its inclusion into pigeon aristocracy to the fact that it has an unusually large beak wattle.

Homers, White Kings, Mondaines, [illegible] Pouters and many other varieties were entered by Messrs. Johnson of Salt Lake City with his fine string of [illegible] Tumblers; Weyer of [illegible], with his Mondaines; Goodacre of Compton, with his Frill Backs; Eighmy of Bostonia, with his Fantails; Willard Foster, Jr., of Fillmore, with his Parlor Tumblers; Brubaker of San Dimas, with White Kings; Anderson, with a fine string of Muffed Tumblers, and Messrs. Longley, Smith, Nielson, McKee, Peterson, Ownbry, Jenson and others of Los Angeles and vicinity, with their favorite varieties.

WHAT IS BEST BREED TO USE FOR CAPONS?

In selecting the breed best suited for caponizing, several factors must be taken into consideration, say poultry authorities. Large capons bring the best prices. Consequently the breed should be large. It does not pay to caponize small fowls. Yellow legs and skin, as in other classes of poultry, are most popular. Plymouth Rocks, Light Brahmas, Cochins, Cornish, Langshans and Wyandottes are all recommended by different producers, as are also various crosses of these. Orpingtons also make fine capons, but the white legs and skin are somewhat of a disadvantage in this country.

Brahmas and Cochins possess good size. Some breeders claim that Brahmas are difficult to operate upon; others deny this. Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes are somewhat smaller, but sell readily and possess the advantage of yellow skin and legs. The Langshan is large and is easily operated upon. The Cornish is probably most useful as a cross with some of the other breeds, thereby improving the breast meat without materially reducing the size of the fowl.

In New England the Brahma was formerly the most popular breed because of the demand for large birds for roasters. Later, crosses between the Light Brahma and the Barred or White Plymouth Rock became quite popular, while at present pure Barred and White Plymouth Rocks are perhaps most widely used.

GIVE BROODY HENS REGULAR FEEDING.

When hens become broody they should be "broken up" as quickly as possible. The sooner this is done, the sooner they will resume laying. To break a hen of broodiness, she should be confined to a small coop raised off the ground, preferably with a slat bottom. Give her plenty of water to drink; she may be fed or not, as desired. Not much difference will be found in the time required to break her of broodiness, whether she is fed or made to fast.

Usually from three to six days' confinement will break her, but some hens require ten to twelve days. The broody hen will be recognized by her inclination to stay on the nest at night, the ruffling of her feathers and her picking at anyone who approaches her, and by the clucking noise she makes. The fact that her broodiness has been "broken up" can be recognized by the disappearance of these symptoms.
